The Buzzard, a large bird measuring nearly thirty inches across the wings, and closely resembling the Eagle when in flight, is not quite extinct in Great Britain. Several pairs manage to nest in Wales, and we are told upon good authority that they are actually increasing. Of course, they have received every protection or would have had their nests rifled by egg collectors, etc., long ago. Wales is also responsible for the protection of a few pairs of Kites—grand birds, which were once common enough everywhere. Just the very spot where the Kites dwell must remain a secret. The eggs are so valuable that the collector would run almost any risk to obtain them.

TO PREVENT REDMITE GETTING INTO THE NEST-BOX.

[Will the sender please forward name and address?—EDITOR.]

The sketch shows an ordinary wooden nest-box, on a wood bracket, with a slot screw-hole for hanging it up inside the cage. The box is 3¾in. square by 1⅞in. deep inside, and is to be made of yellow pine. The upright bracket is 5in. by 2in. by ¼in., and the beam 4½in. by 1in. by ½in., with an ordinary tin lid placed on, as shown in sketch. Then you require a piece of pine about ¼in. deeper than lid, and about ½in. thick. This should be fastened to the nest-box. Now you require an ordinary screw to fasten the box on to the bracket. The next thing is to put a layer of Keating's insect powder all round the inside of the lid, under the box. This will make the redmite's journey short. This is the only way that has proved successful with me.

A SEED MILL.

Sent by S. Ferguson, 129, Raploch Street, Larkhall.

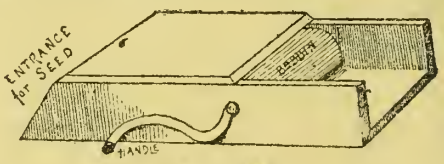
Enclosed is a sketch of a seed crusher, which my father has used successfully for over thirty years. Make the sides and bottom of a box about six inches long. Then get an empty thread bobbin, or spool, and cut the rim off till it is level with the barrel;



A Seed Mill.

then groove all round the barrel with a knife. The box should be the same width as the bobbin, but make the sides about 1-16 of an inch higher than the barrel of the bobbin. Then bore holes in the sides of the box, 2 inches from the end, and 1-16 of an inch higher than the hole through the bobbin. You then put the bobbin in the box level with the holes in the sides; then fix in a handle that fits tightly, so that when you turn it the bobbin turns also (put the handle through the holes in the box and through the hole in the bobbin). If this does not crush the seed small enough, you can put a sheet of tin in below the bobbin. Put a cover on the top of the box.—S. FERGUSON.

MANNINGHAM C.B.A.

Annual dinner and concert held on March 13th in connection with the distribution of prizes, at headquarters, Mowbray Arms. A substantial dinner was provided by Mr. and Mrs. Newton, and was thoroughly enjoyed by about 50 members and friends. Mr. Huddleston occupied the chair in the unavoidable absence of the president, Mr. H. Grange, and presented the cup, medals, etc., to the successful exhibitors, and complimented the members on their success. The various winners suitably replied. With a few well-chosen words, the Chairman remarked on the advancement made by the society during the past year, and hoped to see some of the M.C.B.A. novices winning their Yorkshire Union novice medals next year. The musical part of the programme was ably sustained by Messrs. Wright, Price and Coulson, Slater, Metcalfe, Dennison, Battye and Lunn. Mr. Rawlings was the accompanist, each artiste receiving hearty applause. Votes of thanks were given to the chairman, host and hostess, and artistes.—W. HOLROYD, Sec.

KIRKSTALL AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held at headquarters, Congregational Schoolroom, February 27th, Mr. Chew in the chair. After the usual business, Mr. Richmond (Rodley) gave a lecture on the "Breeding of Cinnamon Marks." Beginning with the situation of the room, he mentioned that it was immaterial to him whether it faced north, south, east, or west, having had as good results in rooms facing north as any other. The chief thing to look for was good light, and one should avoid damp and draughts. He then gave particulars and dimensions of cages, selecting of stock, and various points to avoid in pairing, feeding, etc. The practical experience, coupled with his open and straightforward delivery, made his remarks very interesting. Many questions were asked, and were all answered in a satisfactory manner. A hearty vote of thanks was given Mr. Richmond, and also an invitation to visit us at some other time. This brought a most instructive and enjoyable meeting to an end. We have some more splendid papers expected from other practical men at future meetings, and we give a hearty invitation to fanciers interested.—WHITELEY AND HORNBY, hon. secretaries.

Breeding Cages.

A very interesting and instructive lecture was given by Mr. C. H. Cooper (East Ham), at 4, Cranbrook-road, on March 9th, on "Breeding Cages." The meeting was fairly well attended, several ladies being present. A specimen of the cage made and used by the lecturer was shown. Every part of the cage was made in sections, and the process was explained in detail, some of the parts being patented by the lecturer. Iron brackets (to hold the cages) were a feature of great interest, and valuable, especially where one has not much room at his disposal. They presented a neat appearance in the bird room. The cage when made in sections, is a great boon to cage bird breeders, and as the lecturer explained, "Cleanliness is next to Godliness," and this applied in the breeding of birds. His cages could be cleaned thoroughly in a short time. The patent seed hopper was also of interest; this does away with the waste of seed, and also prevents the birds picking their food over. It is also fitted up with a small sieve at the bottom to free the seed from dust. The drinking utensils were of glass, which are easily cleaned—a very good idea, as no dirt can get in the corners as is seen in some. The nest brackets are an improvement; they are made of iron, and are fitted into a small slot at the back of the cage. They are easily taken down and examined, and everything is made very neatly and strong. The perches are made so that they can be taken out and cleaned, one end of them being hollow so that if any insects should get into the cage this would be the place where they would get and a smart rap on anything would quickly dislodge them. The numbering of the cages for reference was done by a neat figure being placed in the corner in white enamel; this presents a tidy appearance to the cage and also does away with the unsightly chalk marks so often seen on the fronts of breeding cages. The lecturer also urged young fanciers to start with good stuff. Several questions were put to the lecturer, which were all satisfactorily answered, and the meeting closed with a hearty vote of thanks to him. Eight new members joined.—A. WEBB, Hon. Secretary.

Rearing Young Canaries.

A large number of fanciers assembled at headquarters, P.S.A. rooms, on March 2nd, to hear a lecture by the chairman, Mr. W. Foxall, on "The feeding and rearing of young Canaries." The lecturer was introduced by the vice-chairman, Mr. Green. Mr. Foxall's paper was framed more for fanciers who had lately taken up the hobby of Canary breeding, of which this society is largely composed. He showed how well fanciers were catered for as regards information on various matters connected with the Fancy. He advised anyone interested in cage birds to join a society. He said it was the best means of gaining knowledge. He spoke for some time on the methods of preparing egg-food for the feeding of young. As soon as these were hatched he preferred feeding on yolk of egg and biscuits, say for the first few days, and afterwards on food prepared from the whole of the egg and bread crumbs. He impressed on all that an egg diet was essential in successful Canary breeding. He also called their attention to the new preparations placed on the market, and said the Fancy was ready for a good food, easily prepared, that had the same feeding value as egg-food. As for green food, he had a strong leaning towards dandelion, and named an idea for forcing young shoots of diet, and he recommended whole and crushed hemp seed, scalded rape and groats. Fanciers should try and find each hen's particular fancy, and feed her accordingly. He recommended putting the cock back again to the hen about the tenth day to help feed the youngsters. When the hen had laid her third egg of the second round, he took both cock and youngsters away from the hen, and let the cock finish off the feeding. He impressed on all present when weaning young birds not to take the egg-food away too early. He also recommended milk sop to be given from the time of leaving their parents to when they were about eight weeks old. He also dealt in an able manner with the difficulties a fancier is placed in during the breeding season—egg binding, bad feeding hens, sweating and plucking of young, and inflammation; he also dealt with young birds, and spoke for some time of the remedies and treatment for these difficulties. The lecture was greatly appreciated by all, and at the close a good number of questions were asked, and were answered to the entire satisfaction of all. A good discussion followed. A vote of thanks was moved by Mr. Kelsall, seconded by Mr. Colville, to Mr. Foxall, for his interesting and instructive lecture.—H. FODEN, Hon. Secretary.

THE SHOWS.

PENDLETON AND SALFORD O.S.

Very successful table show, held at headquarters, March 8th, when 24 birds were staged—16 Yorkshire and 8 Norwich. The Yorkshires were divided into two classes. ## DULWICH O.S.

The second pair show was held at headquarters on March 4th. An entry of 50 pairs faced the judge, Mr. J. Robson; the number would have been considerably increased but for the inclement weather. The Norwich section was a grand one. The birds shown by Messrs. Rogers and Mazzoni (a firm who have acquired from another partnership some of London's best), and those of Messrs. Woolhouse and Sprules were of exceptional merit; nor were those in the novice section far behind. The Yorkshires were not numerous, but the birds shown by Messrs. Wall and Warley are splendid specimens. The class for Muling pairs was one of the warmest seen for some time, competition being very keen. During the evening the judge presented the special prizes. The prize money was also paid. Messrs. Woolhouse and Rogers conducted the arrangements in a satisfactory manner, the latter having the marked catalogues on sale simultaneously with the last card being put up. The show was well attended, and Mr. Kirkham (Peckham) was nominated for membership.

MEDWAY C.B.S.

The members of this newly-formed society held a most successful show of pairs matched for breeding, at the Angel Hotel, Strood, on March 3rd, when the number of pairs was excellent, and the quality of a high order. The day was a most unpropitious one, but this did not damp the enthusiasm of many of the members, although it literally prevented such keen fanciers as Messrs. Wickham, Wade, Young, and Kimbers from getting their birds to the show. In addition to breeding pairs, some capital British birds were shown. Mr. G. Gardner judged, and made a few remarks on some of the exhibits afterwards. Mr. Casemore (chairman) and Mr. G. A. Acland (hon treasurer and secretary) had control of the arrangements, and everything passed off most satisfactorily. The members (many of them) took tea together at the close of the judging, and the most hearty good feeling prevailed, many being the hopes expressed for a successful career to the society.

Altogether 33 pairs faced the judge, Mr. F. King (Leeds).

SPEN VALLEY F.A.

On March 9th, Mr. H. J. Chittenden (Bolton Woods) gave us an excellent lecture on the breeding and management of the Yorkshire Canary. He gave us many useful hints, and was listened to by a real good turn-up of fanciers and friends. Many questions were asked which Mr. Chittenden answered to the satisfaction of all. We also had a pair show, of two classes. Mr. Chitteuden judged, and gave every satisfaction. It was voted the best show ever held in the Spen Valley. This being the first show for the silver rose-bowl, the competition was very keen.

YORK C.B.S.

Successful show of pairs for Mule and Hybrid breeding was held at headquarters, All Saints' Church Rooms, March 8th. The quality of the specimens was excellent, and if some of the owners are fortunate enough to breed Mules or Hybrids from some of the pairs, some beautiful specimens of the bird breeders' art ought to be seen. Special mention should be made of a grand pair put down by Wm. Warriner—an English Goldfinch cock and a yellow Norwich hen, which took first in class 1. Another romping pair put down by Mr. J. Chittenden took first in class 2. Class 3 was a disappointment as regards numbers; Mr. T. Wright, however, secured first with a fine big Siberian Goldfinch and a cl. yell. Norwich hen. Five new members joined the society, this bringing the total membership to over 40. Messrs. A. Richardson and J. H. Davison acted as judges, and their awards seemed to give every satisfaction. The usual vote of thanks was given to the judges. At the next meeting Mr. Nicholson will give a paper on "Birds I Have Kept and How to Breed and Rear Them."

CITY OF BIRMINGHAM C.B.S.

Usual monthly meeting, and also a table show for matched pairs, held at Crown Hotel, Station Street, on March 3rd, Mr. Broadhurst in the chair. Mr. W. Read was elected to membership. Permission was given to the secretary to send the usual guarantee to CAGE BIRDS to ensure the date of the open show being inserted in the "Dates Fixed Column." A discussion took place as to whether a nest feather show should be held as in previous years, or a young stock show later. The advocates for a nest feather show carried the day by pointing out that same would best tend to show the individual progress made, while it would be possible at a young stock show to exhibit bought specimens as the fanciers' own breeding. The members approved the action of the treasurer and secretary in appointing Mr. E. J. Ingram trustee. A resolution was also passed that all hon. members pay a subscription of at least 5s. per annum. This concluded the ordinary business. Mr. Paddock then proceeded to make the awards in the pair show, but owing to the severe snowstorm only a few birds were staged. NOR. YELL. CK. ## COVENTRY (Godiva) C.B.S.

Annual pair and British bird show held on March 6th. Some grand birds were staged, and all seemed in the pink of condition. Although the entries numbered 53, owing to the inclement weather, we did not get as many as we expected. Messrs. J. Bent and T. A. ## CATERHAM F.C.

On the occasion of the last members' show, held March 2nd, Mr. G. Gardner gave an address on the breeding of cage birds. He remarked that he was told that the Caterham Club was endeavouring to build up a cage bird section in the annual shows worthy of the other sections. (Loud applause from the birds, which gave rise to roars of laughter.) If they succeeded in doing that they would have done something for Caterham. Pair shows and young stock shows—such as the present one—brought fanciers together; they served to increase interest in some cases, they served to awake an interest—and induce others to join. He suggested that the members bind themselves together and steer clear of jealousies. If they succeeded in making the section a success, he counselled them to alleviate the difficulties of the secretary in carrying out his additional duties. Commenting on the exhibits which had come before him that evening, Mr. Gardner said that in breeding Norwich they needed to match for size and for quality. Size was no good without quality. One of the most essential points was shape. The bird that suited him was the one with the best head, the best body, and the shortest neck. And he did not mind how little there was behind the leg, so to speak, and he wanted the feather to sit just as if it had been ironed—the feather that looked like wax, with bloom upon it like that on the peach, and in the buff bird with the under colour peeping through with the bloom on the top. A male bird that did not show that wonderful under-colour peeping up through the bloom was of no use for breeding purposes. As short a tail as possible was desirable, and also short legs, and they needed to get as much colour as possible into the birds. They would never attain real success unless they used their brains and persevered. Haphazard methods might give some success, but they would never give any sustained success. His opinion was that they could never make a success of feeding for colour unless they had colour in the blood—in the strain. To obtain that they would have to breed for colour and then feed for colour. As regarded Yorkshires, he advised a breeder never to mate two buffs, because they generally bred what were called "trousers." (Laughter.) There could be no object in mating two yellows together unless it was to produce smaller birds, or two buff Yorkshires, unless they wanted to get shaggy thighs or "trousers." Mr. Gardner proceeded to give the points of a good Goldfinch, dealing more particularly with the colours, which should, he said, be deep, rich and lustrous. With respect to Greenfinches, he liked to see them of size and green—not a dirty drab green—pure and quiet. After a reference to Linnets, Mr. Gardner said most of all in British birds they needed lustre. The feather needed to shine like glass. On the motion of Mr. A. J. Kilby, seconded by Mr. P. Shelley, Mr. Gardner was heartily thanked for his lecture.

THE BREEDING AND REARING OF CANARIES.

Lecture delivered before the members and friends of the Barnsley and District C.B.S., by Mr. J. Eyre, of Dodworth, on March 13th, at the Clarence Hotel.

In giving this lecture on "The Breeding and Rearing of Canaries," I must ask you to forgive me if I make any mistakes, for although I have been in the Fancy a good many years, this is the first time I have been called upon to give my experience as a breeder of Canaries.

A Word to Novices.

My first remarks will be to the novice. When you enter into the Fancy, or if you have started to keep birds, always try to have your cages of a uniform size, as nothing looks so nice as a birdroom where the cages are of an equal size. I can tell when I go into a man's room whether he will make a good fancier or not by his cages; and as you can buy a good rack of cages at 2s. 6d. per cage, you will see that it will pay you better to start with new cages than to be buying an old cage here and an old cage there. Besides it makes your birds look a lot better than if you have them in any old cage which you happen to come across. I myself like cages with sand trays, as they are easier to keep clean. Some will say that they do not like sand trays because these breed red mites; but if you paint the cage bottom with paraffin oil and then sprinkle it with Keating's insect powder you will not see any red mite.

Making a Choice.

Let us now turn our attention to the variety of Canary you intend to keep. My advice is, keep only one variety. My reason for this is because if you keep two or more varieties and are doing well with one variety, you are likely to neglect the others. Further than that, it is as well to get well acquainted with one sort before you think of taking up with another. Although I have kept Yorkshires for a great number of years, my Fancy at the present time is the Norwich Plainhead, and I must admit it is only this last three or four years that I have become properly acquainted with what constitutes a Norwich Canary; and as these are birds which I keep, my remarks will be chiefly concerning that variety.

With regard to the pairing up of one's birds, I think the best method is to run one cock with one hen; but if you cannot do that, keep as many cocks as you can, because if you are running only one cock with two hens and he goes wrong, it leaves you in a rather difficult position. Now, in pairing up your birds always try to run year-old cocks with young hens, or vice versa, as I think that by pairing up in this way it has a tendency to keep up the stamina of your birds.

Concerning Type and Quality.

Now let me have a word or two on the type and quality of one's birds. Look well after your hens, as it is from these you must look for both type and quality. Supposing you keep Norwich, you must have them as short as possible (with plenty of substance), a good, broad, round head, short beak and neck, well filled in back, short wings, tail and legs, and a nice jaunty carriage. I do not like to see them hugging the perch too much, as this spoils the look of an otherwise good bird. But those who keep Yorkshires will want them with plenty of length all round.

Having chosen your hens, you need to turn your attention next to the cock birds. I like to have my cock birds as large as I can get them, and as good in colour as possible, as it is to these one must look for both size and colour. If you have a good medium-sized pair you would like to run together, do so by all means, as I find that from such a pair you will get good, medium-sized, young ones; whereas in running a large cock with a small hen you not only get the large birds you are after, but you get a good percentage of small birds as well.

How to Introduce Colour.

Let me strongly advise the novice not to double-buff until he is thoroughly acquainted with his stock, as I think it is a rather delicate matter to deal with. My reason for advising the novice not to double-buff is, that if you do not know your stock you will most likely find that your young ones will come out with a pair of very coarse trousers on. But to those who know their stock and want to increase the size of their birds, I would say, try double-buffing. Of course, I am speaking with regard to the Norwich Plainhead now. While we gain size by double-buffing we must not forget that we shall lose colour. Now how shall we remedy this? Well, let us take it that we thoroughly know our stock, and let us pair two good marked yellows together. Keep the best and largest birds bred from such a pair, and pair them to the young bred from those which you have double buffed. Now in double-yellowing you may chance to breed a buff bird; if you do, and it is good in type, stick to such a bird, as you will find it teeming with quality and colour. Another method of introducing colour into your stock is to get some green blood into your birds. By green blood I do not mean Liverpool green, as these are grass green; but I mean a good bronze green. This is the method I should advise novices to adopt. Some fanciers advise the use of Cinnamon blood, but I do not, as I think you cannot use it as safely as you can in Yorkshires. In the breeding of Yorkshires it has been used long enough to get it thoroughly fixed down, but in the breeding of Norwich it has not been used to such an extent as to make it safe for fanciers in general to use or of any great assistance to the Fancy at present, it having a tendency to make the birds breed long in feather.

Don't Stay at Home.

In conclusion let me advise all young fanciers to visit a show or two, because by staying at home they are likely to think birds are better than what they really are. If you do send some of your birds to a show do not complain if your birds fail to carry off the prizes, but compare them with those that have won, and if you cannot see where your birds fail, ask some fellow fancier to point out where yours are at fault. You know any man will make a good winner, so make it your aim to be a good loser.

Mr. Hinchcliffe asked: What do you use for your egg-food—bread or biscuits?—For twenty years I used biscuits, but for this last three years I have used bread, although I have not been so successful, so I shall again use biscuits. Mr. Carlisle: One of the greatest drawbacks to a novice is egg binding; what do you do to prevent this?—I think myself that if you give a liberal supply of grit and cuttlefish bone and mix a little treacle with the drinking water you will not be trouble with egg binding. Mr. Race: What kind of green food do you give your birds?—Green food I am not a great believer in; I give a little watercress in season, but prefer a bit of good apple. Mr. Hinchcliffe: What would you think of a hen that laid four eggs, sat a few days, and then laid three more?—I should think that through over-feeding of the birds the hen had become over-amorous. After a vote of thanks had been passed, Mr. Eyre said that if anyone was in doubt on any subject, he would be pleased if they would call at his home, and he would try to enlighten them. With a few appropriate remarks by our chairman, Mr. Rapson, this concluded a very pleasant evening. — E. CARLISLE, secretary.

IN THE COURTS.

Catching Birds With Hooks.

At St. Ives on March 10th, says the "Western Morning News," Richard Taylor, fisherman, was charged with catching wild birds with a hook and line. He pleaded guilty.

Supt. Barnfield said the charge was brought under the Act, which was passed last year to amend the Wild Birds Protection Act. This was probably the first case under the new Act. Several of the birds were brought into court. —Replying to the Mayor, defendant said he had a wife and one child, and he caught the birds for food.—The Mayor, addressing Taylor, said the name some of the young men of St. Ives had earned for themselves was not at all an enviable one. It was through such as he (the defendant) the Act had been passed. If they wanted the birds for food they must adopt some more humane method of catching them. Fined 2s. 6d. and costs, or 14 days.

Joseph Quick, fisherman, charged with a similar offence, said he was guilty of setting the hooks, but he did not catch any birds. If he had taken any he was going to carry them home for food. He had only earned £2 for the past six months. He did not try to catch the birds for pleasure, but he wanted them for his wife and four children.—The Magistrates' Clerk pointed out that the defendant was liable under the Act for "attempting" to take the birds the same as if he had actually caught them.—The Mayor said although it was evident the birds were wanted for food, the Bench were bound to mark their disapproval of this cruel practice, and fined Quick the costs of the court (10s.)

Benjamin Penberthy and William John Rowe, fishermen, pleaded guilty to a similar offence. In each case the defeidant said he wanted the birds as food for the children.—The Bench ordered the men to pay the costs (6s. each).

The Mayor said God alone knew the extent of the poverty existing among the fishing population and the hardships they had had to endure during the past few months. The Bench could but express their horror at the cruel and painful manner in which the birds were taken. At the same time, in such periods of depression as those through which they were passing at present there was a certain amount of justification in catching wild animals. He believed the birds were meant in some way for food for poor people, but, as he said in the first case, they must devise some more humane method for catching them.

Superintendent Banfield said the fishermen should know that the close season for wild birds was from March 2nd to July 31st, so that they could not legally catch them now with hook and line or in any other way.—The men were allowed a month in which to pay the fines.

*The Carrion Cro .

The Carrion Crow is a sexton bold,
He raketh the dead from out the mould;
He delveth the ground like a miser old,
Stealthily hiding his store of gold.
Caw! Caw!
The Carrion Crow hath a coat of black,
Silky and sleek, like a priest's, on his back;
Like a lawyer he grubbeth, no matter what way;
The fouler the offal, the richer the prey.
Caw! Caw! the Carrion Crow!
Dig! Dig! in the ground below.

A Magpie in the Stable.

Recently a friend of mine had a clever Magpie. In the daytime Mag was allowed to have the run of the house, but at night he slept in the stable. When the groom went into the stable one morning, he found the horses' rugs under them. He could not account for this as the horses were restless at night. My friend decided to sit up. Just at daybreak he heard a slight russle, and Mag commenced shouting: "Stand up," "Come over," "Gee up," and many other phrases, and the poor horses began to move about, much to Mag's delight. After that Mag slept in the coachhouse.—Sent by J. M. Jackson (age 14), High Street, Bawtry.

*The Persecuted Dodo.

We say "as extinct as a Dodo." This bird was an immense Pigeon. It was a helpless, quiet, clumsy bird, too heavy and too short of wing to fly. It had no weapon of defence, no sharp, strong bill, no tearing claws. Such a bird was easily caught and torn to pieces by dogs and cats. When these animals were taken to the Island of Mauritius, where the Dodo lived, they were allowed to run wild in the woods, with the result that they became more like wolves and panthers than decent dogs and cats. When ships began to visit the islands where the poor Dodos lived, men, dogs, and cats soon put an end to the lives of the gentle birds.—Taken from the school monthly, and sent by Willie Allen (age 11), 26, Mount Street, Cleckheaton, Yorkshire.

Bird Collectors in the East.

It will be remembered that last year Mr. Walter Goodfellow, Mr. Horsbrugh, and Mr. Stalker returned from New Guinea, bringing with them Birds of Paradise, which had never before been imported. Those obtained by Mr. Goodfellow went to the aviaries of private individuals; the birds secured by the other two collectors were exhibited at the Zoological Gardens, and among them was the famous Rudolph's Bird of Paradise. Now Mr. Stalker is once more travelling eastward, and he has with him Mr. W. Frost, who is making his first trip. They will work the Aru Islands, and when they have spent some time there, Mr. Frost will bring back the birds, some of which will be sent to Sir William Ingram's aviaries, and some that gentleman proposes to liberate on his estate in the West Indies. On Mr. Frosts's departure, Mr. Stalker will, according to "The Queen," become a member of what is one of the most important expeditions of modern times—the exploration of Dutch New Guinea, undertaken by the British Ornithologists' Union, in commemoration of their jubilee last year. Mr. Walter Goodfellow will be in command. The expedition will land on the south coast, just under the highest point of the Charles Louis Mountains, which will be thoroughly explored. This is estimated will occupy at least a year, and the expenses have been calculated at £3 000. It is from this northern part of the island that the stranger forms of Birds of Paradise have been brought within the last quarter of a century, and there is every reason to believe that such an expedition will obtain a good collection of all the species already described, and probably of others that will prove to be new to science. The Mr. Frost referred to will be well-known to many of our readers (especially Metropolitan fanciers). He exhibited one or two birds at the last Horticultural Hall Show.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

Songsters in a Snow Storm.

Yesterday, the 14th day of the month, was rough and stormy, with a cold cutting north-east wind, and snow during the greater part of the day. The weather conditions since Christmas have been as bad as they possibly could be; it is now more like the commencement than the end of winter. We have only the lengthening daylight to encourage us to hope and to look forward to better things. And yet, in spite of all this, we feel that we are steadily advancing towards the summer solstice. There is greater evidence of this in the doings of the birds, than there is in the vegetable world. All through yesterday's storm the rich wild notes of the Thrush sounded from the tall elms, and on the lower branches of an old walnut tree a melodious Blackbird fluted his somewhat melancholy lay. He sang as though despondent and out of humour. In the early morning a reckless Skylark rose in the air and fluttered among the whirling snowflakes; mounting higher and higher, he trilled and carolled as blithely as he would in sunshine. He rose until he was lost in the storm, and an occasional passage of sweet music alone told us he was still on the wing. It is only within the last few days that the birds have commenced to sing with any spirit. The time of song and love and marriage has arrived, and even the unusual March weather can no longer restrain them. Their partners have been chosen some time, and some of the more precocious pairs have already selected sheltered positions on the ivy-clad walls, so common around the old gardens in the village.

Cold and exposed as it must be in the tall elm trees, the Rooks have been busy for some time, and it is quite a common sight now to see one feeding its partner upon the nest. When the snow lay thickly upon the ground, a pair daily visited an old walnut tree opposite my house. The male bird would descend to the ground, and hunt among the snow for some time. When his partner joined him he at once changed his attitude, and dropping his wings and raising his tail, began to strut round her like a love-sick Sparrow, at times making little rushes at her, which she easily avoided by simply stepping on one side without apparently noticing him. This behaviour of father Rook would not attract much attention in a smaller bird, but in such a sedate member of the wild bird community, it looks exceedingly comical.

Pigeons in Hants.

In the county of Hants, the wild Pigeons are so numerous that arrangements have been made for periodical shootings. Upon one day in February no less than 676 were accounted for, over a hundred falling to one gun.

The Lordly Eagle.

Like many smaller birds, the Golden Eagle allows no feathered intruders of its own species within its haunts. Consequently, although they are slightly upon the increase, they can never become numerous, as they are only tolerated within certain districts.

Protection Time.

The beginning of March is the time when many birds receive protection under the Wild Birds Protection Act, to allow them to nest in security. Birds pursued for sport benefit by this as much as any, as no sportsman would think of shooting a Woodcock, for instance, after the second day of the month.

Scarcity of Snow Buntings.

A northern paper reports that the Snow Bunting has not been seen of late years in its usual numbers. "At one time these Alpine birds were wont to appear in large flocks, but they do not seem to have visited the slopes of the Pennines in force for some years. It is said that a few pairs breed as far south as the Yorkshire moors."

Fate of Goldcrests.

The following interesting cutting is taken from a daily contemporary, and was sent by a reader residing at Grantham:—"He says: 'I remember in the winter of 1867, in the month of December, during a severe spell of frost and snow, I and a companion were leading stones in a deep quarry at Ryhall, Rutlandshire. On looking up at the face of the rock, we were surprised to see a party of little birds huddled close together on a small branch of whitethorn growing out of a fissure, and in a sheltered position. After looking for some time, and finding the birds made no movement, my companion climbed to the top of the cart and took them off the branch one by one in his hand, when he found that they were all dead and frozen stiff. On taking them to a naturalist for identification, they turned out to be a family of Golden-crested Wrens. They numbered eight.'" give entire satisfaction to all purchasers, and having won at all leading shows this season (see show reports), and having over two hundred Yorkshires in stock, I can supply you with all varieties of Yorkshires except greens, cocks or hens. These birds are stock birds in every sense of the word; they are 7 in. long and full of quality; not small, weedy birds. For a quick sale I am offering them at rock bottom prices. Just one testimonial to show the value of birds sent out by me: "March 5th. 41, Thornton-street, Darlington.—Enclosed find P.O. for a yellow ticked hen; I saw a pair last night which you sold a member of our society, which won 1st prize at our pair show. Kindly forward me a good hen, and oblige yours truly, from W.U., Assistant Secretary, to H. J. Chittenden. My prices: Yellow or buff cocks, 8/6, 10/6, 12/6, 15/ to 40/-; hens, yellow or buff, 5/6, 6/6, 7/6, 8/6, 10/-, 15/-; pairs, 12/6, 15/6, 20/-, 25/-, 30/-; extra large stock cocks, 20/-, 30/-, 40/-, up to 100/-; Norwich pairs, 8/6, 10/6, 12/6; single cocks or hens reasonable; songsters, 6/- each; also a few Mules; on seven days' approval.—108, Bolton Hall-rd., Bolton Woods, Bradford.

AMBLER'S.

AMBLERS' strain of Yorkshires is not of a few weeks' standing like many of the advertisers of to-day, but is the study of a lifetime, and for thirty years has been acknowledged the finest strain on earth. This is proved by the noted champions we have bred, sold, and exhibited during that period. We have not gone in for any Yorkshire competitions, but this last season our team of Yorkshires have won more first prizes than any team of Yorkshires in the Fancy at the number of shows exhibited at. Owing to serious illness, have not been able to offer our birds for sale, so have an extra choice lot of Yorkshires to dispose of. Cocks of wonderful length, correct shape, and full of quality; hens long-sided, full of breed, and teeming with quality. These are the sort to breed champions, and are guaranteed to give satisfaction. Pairs from 20/- to 60/-, hens 10/- to 30/-; also a few winners for sale, approval.—Messrs. Amblers (late of Bradford), 138, Westminster-rd., Morecambe.

HUDSON'S CHAMPION YORKSHIRES.

In reply to many customers inquiring about birds being ready, all my birds are hard and fit for breeding, and in good condition, and I can recommend to them who want to breed own winners, as they are all bred from or related to winners at all leading shows: Shipley, Windhill, Bingley, Baildon, Bradford, and others too numerous to mention, including Palace. And remember, I want no man's money who does not purchase satisfactorily. My stock includes clears, ticked, green-marked, and few cinnamon-marked. At Crystal Palace my birds have won first prize in every Yorkshire class (except Greens), in three years combined. I also won at Crystal Palace in two successive years more firsts, medals, and special prizes than all other exhibitors put together during the same period. I state facts that can be easily verified, and not wild exaggerated bounce to catch the inexperienced fancier.

My birds come to the front year after year as regularly as the day dawns, which is ample proof that this is the most pure and reliable strain of the present day. The chief characteristics of my strain are length, position, style, length of leg, and superlative quality of feather, combined with plenty of nerve, which is such an essential quality in a really high-class Yorkshire.

To those who wish to breed their own winners, now is your opportunity, as all birds are in perfect health and condition and cold room bred. Three days' approval. Stamped address for particulars.

To breed Budgerigars successfully you must have the "Improved Secure" Husks because they don't fall to pieces when in use as others do. They remain unequalled, and are different to any others. Individual testimonials don't count for much, so listen to what experts say:—"Cage Birds" says they are "far superior to the old husks." "Feathered World" says: "Undoubtedly, the new husks are very superior to the old." Again "Exchange and Mart" says: "You had better order the improved form; even if it is a little dearer than the old-fashioned sort, it is cheaper in the long run." "Fur and Feather" tells its correspondents: "They have distinct advantages over the old sort." "Poultry" has said: "For Budgerigars we advise the use of the improved style of husks." Surely these are convincing testimonials. They are 4/6 dozen; smaller quantities, 5d. each. Interesting pamphlet, entitled "Budgerigar Breeding," free on application. Superior box nests for Cockatiels, etc., 1/6. Send for the pamphlet now.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

HAS 1,000 LINNETS & 500 NEW BOOKS
The sure guide for contest singers. Owing to the many letters that have been sent to me from different parts how they sing at contests, I have made up my mind to publish a new book. It gives the correct rules of the Linnet Club, also states how they sing at contests and how they hang their birds, and follow in turns. It gives the correct time for quality and time singing. This will enlighten every purchaser. My book of secrets is also printed in this book, and how to save Greypates and Goldfinches from dying when fresh caught; also how to train Larks for contests and what to feed them on and how to get them fit in a very short time. Now, all the members of Linnet clubs should send for one of these at once. These are the same rules as I won all my contests with, which are the finest rules in the world. The price of this book is the small fee of 9d., sent by return of post. No waiting. 64 house-moulted Linnets, singing with their wings down. OF COURSE you have noticed the large quantity of unsolicited testimonials that I publish every week, but you have never seen the still larger lot that I do not publish, have you? Together this vast amount of letters, all speaking in highest terms of praise of my Roller Canaries, prove without the shadow of doubt that no other Roller on the market can come within miles of them for quality of song and lowness of price, and that my advertisements every week are not flights of imagination, but solid, stubborn facts. I claim to be by far the largest retailer of Roller Canaries in the kingdom, and only importer of Hans Weber's Leipzig Rollers, of which I have an immense stock, all in full song day and gaslight, with long hollow and double rolls, sweet silvery trills, waterbubble runs, soft roulades, piccolo trills, hollow bell rolls, deep bass rolls, bell, harp, flute and Nightingale jug-jug notes, etc, etc., and guaranteed entirely free from chopping Titlark or other harsh notes, prices 6/6 and 7/6 each. Special bandmasters, which excel in the deep bass and hollow bell rolls, 10/- and 12/6 each; Roller hens, 3/- each, two 5/-. I also have a grand selection of guaranteed genuine "Seifert" contest masters, all in full song, at 15/-, 17/6, and 21/- each; Seifert hens, 4/- each. These Seifert cocks are of pure blood, and are in full song, ready for immediate contesting or breeding. Ordinary loud, free singing Hartz cocks, in full vigorous song, 5/- each, seven 31/6; Hartz hens, 2/- each, 3/6 couple. Roller-singing cabinets, with loose fronts and folding doors, 2/6 each. Singing box cages, 1/-, 1/2, 1/4, 1/6, 1/9, and 2/- each. Roller breeding cages, with loose fronts, 2/6 and 3/- each; double breeders, with loose fronts and sliding partitions, 4/6 each. All cages are joiner-made, for practical use, not "eyesores." Few more letters given below, which have not been duplicated in this or any other paper "5, Patrick-place, Ballymena, Ireland, March 22nd.—Sir,—Received Roller safe, and I think him the best I have got, as he sings very well. Thanking you for straightforward dealing and satisfaction.—Yours, F. Falls." "Elms Lodge, Torre, Torquay, March 22nd.—Sir,—Am very much pleased with Roller. He started to sing so soon as unpacked. Thanks for prompt attention, straightforward dealing, and good packing.—Yours, J. Bolt." "235, Firs-lane, Leigh.—Sir,—I enclose P.O. for two more Rollers, as I have sold the last four I got from you. They are all singing splendid, and my customers would not sell them for treble the price they paid for them.—Yours, J. Cowburn." "17, Buckingham-street, Brighton, March 21st.—Sir,—Received birds in fine condition. The cock started singing as soon as let out. Thanks for prompt attention.—Yours, C. Cooper." "24, West-street, Worthing, March 20th.—Sir,—Birds arrived safe yesterday. I am well satisfied with them. Some of them were singing on the road from station.—Yours, J. Fyfield." "9, Sealford-road, Melton Mowbray, March 22nd.—Sir,—Rollers to hand quite safe, and am well satisfied with them. It's a treat to sit and listen to the cock; my wife calls him a "perfect little gem." I shall send for more in a week or so.—Yours, A. Potter." "Sybil Villas, Clydach, March 19th.—Sir,—I have often read in CAGE BIRDS of birds sold by you singing as soon as unpacked, but the one you sent me (Seifert Roller) excels them all. He was singing at the station, and singing all along the road when carried home, and as soon as put into a bigger cage started again, and sang until 10.30 that night, only taking a little interval for seed and water, and is still the same. I have tried to stop him singing so much by covering the cage with a thick cloth, but he sings in the dark just the same. He won the singing match, beating the bird from ————, and has also won three more, beating birds imported direct from Germany. Everybody that visits here praise the "Gore bird"; his top notes are a little loud, but very melodious—not at all harsh. He starts wonderfully fine, and makes his changes lovely. There is not one in our district that can touch him. I don't hear anything about ———— now, nor Germany, since the conquest.—Yours, Morgan Morgans." "Brooks Mill, Audlem, March 18th.—Sir,—After having birds side by side for a week, I find your bird to have the sweetest notes and most changes. If only people that are wanting Rollers could have heard them side by side they would soon decide to have them from W. Gore. Thanking you for same, and when wanting another shall certainly send to you.—Yours, Albert Bebbington." "17, Bellfield-terrace, Coalburn Station, Scotland, March 15th.—Sir,—I am more than pleased with the Roller cock you sent me at 7/6. It is best value I ever got. I have had birds from about every advertiser in CAGE BIRDS and other papers, and must say your bird beats them all. I shall certainly get all my birds from you in future. I was also pleased with the Roller-singing cabinet; everybody admires it. Please send following.—Yours, John Stewart." You see now why I can call myself the largest retailer of Rollers in the kingdom, don't you? All birds are sent on full week's approval solely at my risk during the whole time, either on receipt of cash or CAGE BIRDS deposit system, and unless bird is perfectly satisfactory the whole of your money is promptly and cheerfully refunded. All are safely and warmly packed free of extra charge, and postcard sent before birds. I don't care how hard a person is to please, if I cannot do so from my large stock, no other dealer can. Will you let me send you a Roller on week's trial? I don't mind even if you do not want to purchase one. I will send it simply for you to hear it sing if you will deposit cash with Editor, and return the bird at end of week. Nearly all England has one of my Rollers, and I would like to supply the remaining few. Follow the crowd, and buy from the importer of the Leipsig Rollers.

A WASHING EXHIBITION.

Given before the Sunderland C.B.A. on March 20th, by Mr. J. Riseborough.

A good attendance of members and friends assembled at the Fawcett Street Cafe to witness Mr. Riseborough's exhibition of his skill in washing birds. The birds operated upon were supplied by one of the members, and judging by their very dirty appearance had been specially selected for the occasion. This, however, said Mr. Riseborough, was all the better, for the younger fanciers would be able to appreciate more fully the difference between a dirty bird and one spotlessly clean.

Have all Materials Ready.

Commencing, Mr. Riseborough said, that when preparing to wash birds it is necessary that you should have all your materials ready to hand, so that they can be used when wanted. A good supply of water, both hot and cold, a pot for soap, three dishes for washing and rinsing, a soft-haired shaving brush, and a sponge were the chief things. You also require a soft cloth, preferably an old silk handkerchief, for the purpose of taking as much water as possible from the bird immediately after it has been sponged in the last water. Then come the cloths for wrapping the birds in. I prefer old flannel. Finally comes the drying cage, of which at the present time there are many elaborate designs used by different fanciers. In our case it will consist of the ordinary Norwich show cage. The soap I intend using is known as "feather beautifier," and is very useful in giving a gloss to the plumage, although I have found a good curd soap to be equally as effective in this respect.

We now come to the water. Have your first water just hot enough to enable you to comfortably bear the back of your hand in it. The second water I like to have just barely warm, and the third just between the two, not so hot as the first, nor so cold as the second. I prefer this method to using the coldest water last, for I have found that by using the coldest water in the second basin it acts as a reviver to the bird after it has gone through the ordeal of washing.

How to Proceed.

Now, everything being ready, catch your bird as gently as possible, so as not to flurry it, for you do not want to have a bird about to be washed lying palpitating heavily. Place the bird in your hand breast downwards and immerse it in the first water, with the exception of the head. This soaks the feathers through, and you may now begin to use the soap and brush. Here Mr. Riseborough proceeded to wash the first bird, fully explaining as he went along the best way to hold the bird, first washing the wings, tail, and back, then smartly turning the bird over and washing the underside of the wings and tail, then the throat and breast, finally turning the bird over again and doing the neck, finishing off with the head. He then proceeded to rinse off as much soap as possible with the first water, repeating this process in the second water. Here he explained that it was necessary to see that all soap was off the hands before proceeding to the third and final water, which should be quite free from soap. Having finally rinsed the bird, he took as much water from it with the sponge as possible, then taking the bird to the fire he applied the silk handkerchief to it, absorbing a great deal of moisture from it before finally wrapping it up.

Mr. Riseborough had previously stated that the drying cloths and cages should be thoroughly warmed before putting the birds into them; and he now showed them how to wrap the bird in the cloth, explaining that the cloth should not be placed too tight around the bird's body, and that the bird should always be placed with its tail towards the fire. He carefully impressed upon those present that a bird should never be placed upon its back, pointing out that the less a bird was placed upon its back during the washing process the better. Two more birds were then washed, Mr. Riseborough relating one or two anecdotes of the way in which he had seen birds washed by other fanciers, some of which were very amusing.

While the birds were drying, Mr. Riseborough was plied with questions by the younger fanciers, to all of whom he gave the greatest satisfaction. Mr. Riseborough also advised those who had never yet washed a bird to try their hands at once. "Have a try to-morrow," said he; to which one of the visitors replied that the wife would be telling him he had better start and wash the bairns instead—a remark which evoked a general and broad grin. After the birds were thoroughly dry they were handed round for inspection, and their spotless condition drew from those present great appreciation of Mr. Riseborough's skill, especially from the visitors, not one of whom left before the meeting closed. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Riseborough brought a most enjoyable and instructive evening to a close.—W. REID, hon. secretary.

Wild Birds in Edinburgh Park.

The Parks Committee of the Edinburgh Town Council have had under consideration a letter from the chairman of the Scottish Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, asking that the capture of wild birds in the city public parks and open spaces should be made an offence under the Parks By-laws. It was stated that complaints had been made to the Society of the trapping and catching by professional bird catchers (and others) of birds, particularly Linnets, Chaffinches, and others, in the public parks and open spaces. It was agreed to reply that the by-laws for the public parks were being recast, and that the Committee intended to insert a clause for the protection of wild birds.

CLUB REPORTS

METROPOLITAN C.B.A.

At the last meeting, held at headquarters, the Crown Hotel, Lavender Hill, S.W., on March 11th, an extremely interesting and instructive lecture was given by Mr. Geo. Gardner, the club room being crowded. Mr. Gardner took for his subject the condition of birds before pairing. Mrs. Box, Mrs. Maddison, Mrs. Cooper, and Mr. Edwards were proposed for membership. Mr. W. Brook was elected a member.—E. Box, Hon. Sec.

GORAN AND DISTRICT O.C.S.

Usual meeting held in Boiler Makers' Hall, Greenhaugh-street. The president, Mr. J. Fraser, presided. A deal of discussion took place regarding judging for special prizes. Mr. A. Fergison moved that specials be judged for as last year. Mr. D. Black seconded, with recommendation that it lie over to next meeting. The judges for our next show were nominated and balloted in the usual manner. This concluded the meeting.—R. FERNIE, Hon. Sec.

BOLTON AND DISTRICT O.S.

There was a good muster of members and friends at headquarters on March 17th, to witness a practical demonstration of cage-front making, by Mr. J. Smith, one of the members. Mr. Smith first dealt very fully with the methods employed by him of making the spirit, tinning the iron, etc., and then proceeded, in a good, workmanlike manner, with the operation. In a very short space of time there was handed round the room for inspection a front as neat and as well-made as anyone could wish for, and which, as the lecturer explained, was capable of being produced for a fraction over 3d. The meeting closed with a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Smith, on the proposition of Mr. Cooper, seconded by Mr. Taylor.

SALE (Open) O.S.

First annual tea and dance held on March 20th, at Masonic Hall, Tatton Road, when a good number of fanciers and friends sat down to a "knife and fork" tea. After justice had been done to this, the secretary, in the absence of the chairman, who was suffering from a severe cold, thanked all those who had joined in trying to make the affair a success. The programme was opened by Mr. Jenkinson's selections on the gramophone. Then Mrs. Smith, who presided at the piano, led off the dancing with a waltz, under the very able conducting of Colour-Sergeant Ellingham, of the Sale Territorials, who also gave very valuable help with his piccolo. Among those present were Mr. G. W. F. Lythgoe, secretary of Manchester and N.C.O.S.; the well-known Altrincham secretary, Mr. T. Harrison, who, we hear, ties for the gold medal of the Green Club; also Mr. Buskey, the well-known exhibitor of Borders, and Mr. Wardleworth, of Altrincham, who came quite unexpected, and favoured us with a splendid song. The committee and president did all in their power to make everybody feel at home, and, needless to say, succeeded, as everyone expressed their satisfaction.—JAS. IRLAM, secretary.

MORRISTON AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

A most enjoyable evening was spent on March 20th, at the Woodfield Coffee Tavern, the society's headquarters. The members did ample justice to themselves. The function was the partaking of a cold luncheon, this being their second annual event of this kind. A vote of thanks was passed to the host and hostess for catering; also to Mr. D. M. Powell (chairman) for presiding so well. After the "feast" a meeting was held, as it was the society's final one for the year. The auditor's report was accepted. The society have to their credit close on £18 in the bank, so with such a balance in hand and the members catering so well as regards classes for exhibitors, I think they ought to patronise this society's show well next year. The retiring officers were given a hearty vote of thanks for their services during the past year. The new officers elected were:—Chairman, Mr. R. Stamp (Sketty); vice-chairman, Mr. W. R. Morgan; secretary, Mr. W. H. Lewis, Timothy Row, Morriston, near Swansea; auditors, Messrs. T. Phillips and D. M. Powell; treasurer, Mr. Harding Williams; committee, Messrs. W. Powell, Gervyn Jones, P. J. Rees, E. M. Evans, A. E. Taylor, W. H. Wilcox, T. Thomas, F. Heal, and T. Hopkins; show manager, Mr. D. Jeremy. It was decided to hold our next show on November 18th. It was with regret that the members accepted the late secretary's resignation, as he is reluctantly compelled to give up the office owing to his having no time to attend to same this year. But they would not free him from work, as they unanimously elected him as show manager. Will all intending members attend a meeting at headquarters on March 27th, this being the first meeting of the year? It is hoped all members will attend.—D. JEREMY, late secretary.

CLAPHAM AND DISTRICT C.B.A.

On March 16th, a large number of members and fanciers assembled at headquarters, Landor Hotel, to take part in a washing competition of Canaries, for valuable prizes given by Mr. Hayward and money prizes by the club, for birds that dried the best in one hour. The following members entered:—Messrs. E. J. Warley, L. Priest, E. Sexton, S. A. Sandy, C. Cutting, J. Brighty, F. Clark, W. J. Honeysett, C. Askew. Mr. Vale first gave an exhibition to the members present, explaining in detail the best methods to adopt in washing, and very quickly put a bird through the process, and it looked very smart indeed after its tubbing. After a very brief time one of the competing members found his bird had gone to its last rest, to the surprise of the younger members. The remainder turned out their birds in quick time. Mr Vale acted as judge, and it did not take him long to find the winning bird. He stated that, had there been a quarter of an hour more allowed, the winning bird would have been lower down, as the longer-feathered birds were longer in drying, but looked very smart. The result was as follows:—W. J. Honeysett, 1st with a Border Fancy (case of fish-knives and forks); F. Clark, 2nd with a tight-feathered Yorkshire, washed well and clean (amber cigar-holder, gold-mounted); E. Sexton, 3rd (money prize given by the club); vhc, C. Cutting, nice Yorkshire; hc, J. Brighty, Norwich; c. L. Priest, fine yellow Norwich. Several members, owing to unforeseen circumstances, could not be present; so it is proposed to hold a British bird competition in a short time. After a vote of thanks to Mr. E. J. Warley for lending his patent drying cage, and to Mr. Vale for judging, and Mr. C. T. Maxwell for giving valuable assistance, an enjoyable meeting was terminated.—A. C. ASKEW, secretary.

Nests of birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

SANDY LANE AND DISTRICT C.B.A.

A lecture by Mr. S. Dean was given recently on "What we want in the Yorkshire Canary." There was a very good turn up of members and friends, who enjoyed the lecture. The way in which the speaker answered the numerous questions helped also to make it altogether a very pleasant evening.—B. BUCKLE, secretary.

SALE OPEN O.S.

At our meeting on March 15th we were treated to a very bright and instructive lecture by Mr. J. W. Bancroft (Sale) on Breeding and Feeding for Colour. There was a very good number of members and friends present. Everyone seemed bent on learning something new, if possible, which, I fully believe, most of us did. After a vote of thanks to the lecturer, Mr. Bancroft suitably replied, and backed his speech up by promising to give a washing demonstration in June.—JAS. IRLAM, Sec.

BRADFORD (West) C.B.A.

The annual social was held at their headquarters, Red Lion Hotel, on March 20th, about 100 members, friends, and their wives being present. A very enjoyable evening was spent. The Moire Quartette Party rendered glees, etc., and Mr. H. Farquahar created quite a sensation with his comic song. Mr. A. Penningroth presided at the piano. Mr. J. Townend (president), who makes a most affable chairman, presented the prizes to the winners, viz., Champion section: 1, Mr. J. Clark; 2, Mr. T. H. Inman. Novice section: 1, Mr. H. Graham; 2, Mr. W. Helliwell.—J. W. TELFORD, hon. secretary.

FIFE AND KINROSS NORWICH O.S.

Meeting held March 20th, in Penman's Masonic Arms, Cowdenbeath, Mr. T. Barclay in the chair. Mr. J. Millar (Kinross) was elected hon. vice-president, and Mr. A. Hynd, Kinross, on the committee. The rules were reviewed and passed as ready for printing, and the printing contract was settled, the books the secretary had bought being approved of. There was a general discussion on the Norwich Plainhead, in which all present took part. Five new members were enrolled. Any fanciers wishing to be enrolled are requested to write to me.—A. DICKSON, 37, Adam's Terrace, Kelty.

LOANHEAD AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

A meeting was held in Masons Arms, March 13th, Mr. A. Jardine (president) in the chair. Motions: That a class be added to Border Fancy section for Buff Greens; also that British birds be divided into two classes instead of one. After a little discussion both classes were added to. British birds have now a Softbill class, and one for Hardbills. Messrs. A. Gilebrist and G. Harper were appointed members of committee in place of Mr. J. Yule resigned. On the motion of the president, it was agreed to extend the time for admitting members to April 30th instead of the end of March. A vote of thanks to the chairman brought a very successful meeting to a close.—WALTER B. SMART, Secretary.

MIDLAND COUNTIES Y.C.C.

First general meeting held at Crown Hotel, Station Street, Birmingham, on March 18th, Mr. J. Burke (Small Heath) in the chair. The following officials for the ensuing year were nominated:—Chairman, Mr. A. Paddock (King's Heath); vice-chairman, Mr. A. E. Bishop (Worcester); hon. secretary and treasurer, Mr. W. C. Wells (Erdington); committee (for Birmingham district), Messrs. J. H. Allen, J. Burke, J. L. Beck, E. C. Latham, S. Mole, and W. H. Uzzell; Outside Birmingham: Messrs. W. P. Foster (Loughborough), W. H. Raybould (Dudley), A. E. Bishop (Worcester), T. Hawley (Hanley), J. W. Lawton (Crewe), and A. Harris (Rugby). Election of president and vice-president was left in abeyance until next meeting, to be held on May 13th. It was decided to name the club the "Midland Counties Y.C.C.," with membership confined to the counties of Warwick, Worcester, Stafford, Northampton, Leicester, Derby, Nottingham, Bedford, Salop, Huntingdon, Hereford, Radnor, Rutland, and South Cheshire. An excellent set of rules similar to those of kindred clubs was drawn up, and copies will be sent to all members shortly; also to the hon. secretaries of Midland cage bird societies for distribution amongst their "Yorkie" members. Subscription was fixed at 2s. 6d. per annum, and in addition a nomination fee of 1s. Next meeting fixed for May 13th, at Crown Hotel, Station Street, Birmingham, 7.30 p.m. —W. C. WELLS, hon. secretary.

HARROGATE C.B.S.

Annual meeting held at King's Cafe on March 15th, Mr. L. Hewson in the chair. The secretary, in presenting his report, stated that the balance in hand had been augmented by a profit of £12 10s. from a successful prize-drawing. The show season had been a failure, they had lost close on £7. The monthly shows had turned out fairly well. The society had lost by death one of its most esteemed members, Mr. Bennison. The financial statement showed that there was a balance in hand of £2 10s. 6d. On the motion of Mr. Fergusson, seconded by Mr. Head, the report and balance-sheet were adopted. The election of officers resulted as follows:—President, Mr. H. Milling; Dr. Wilson (Kirkby Overblow), Councillor H. Abbott, Alderman I. Dickinson, Mr. O. F. Bates, and Mr. A. Chippindale are to be asked to stand as vice-presidents; Mr. G. H. Barnwell was re-elected treasurer; committee, Messrs. Fergusson, Walker, Hewson, Lealman, Duncan, Head, Ireland, Brown, Bousfield, Gregg, Bielby, and Veitch. The following additional rules were adopted:—"Should any vacancies on the committee occur, the existing committee shall have power to fill such vacancies up"; "Any member found borrowing or lending birds for show purposes shall be expelled, and forfeit all prizes or prize money due to him"; "The committee shall have power to deal with any matter not provided for in these rules." Messrs. W. Robson and W. Roberts were elected members. The chairman then presented the prizes won at the monthly shows as follows:—Yorkshire section: 1 (cup), W. Brown; 2 and special (rose bowl and pipe), T. Head; 3 (cup), W. E. Fergusson. Novices, Yorkshire section: 1 (cup), H. Robinson; 2 (timepiece), G. Ireland. Norwich section: 1 (cup), G. H. Barnwell; 2 (pair of curtains), A. Mason. British section: 1 (cup), D. Duncan, junr.; 2 (cruet and toast rack), J. Bousfield. Mr. Barnwell intimated that he would be pleased to give a cup for competition at one of next year's shows. An interesting little ceremony was then witnessed, the members showing their appreciation of the services of Mr. Barnwell, who has been secretary and treasurer of the society for four years, by presenting him with a handsome silver "gipsy" kettle and lamp. The kettle bore the inscription:—"Presented to Mr. G. H. Barnwell by the members of the Harrogate Cage Bird Society in recognition of his valuable services as secretary, March, 1909." The chairman said every member whom he had asked to subscribe had done so willingly and with great pleasure, evidence that the secretary was held in great respect and esteem. Mr. Barnwell suitably acknowledged the compliment, and said he would endeavour to do as well, if not better, in the future than he had done in the past. (Applause.) The remainder of the evening was spent in a convivial manner, an enjoyable programme of songs, etc., being contributed by Messrs. T. Coleman, H. Lunn, Harry Baines, H. Garrett, D. Duncan, junior, and J. H. Walker, with Mr. H. Burrill as accompanist.

DEWSBURY AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Annual meeting held at headquarters, Royal Hotel, on March 13th, Mr. W. T. Pickering presiding. Mr. N. Rayner gave the secretary's report, and a review of the past season's work, thanking all the officials for their loyal support. The year has been a prosperous one in all respects, and this ought to be an encouragement for us to face the future and do even better. The enthusiasm which the members have shown in everything they have taken in hand is capable of accomplishing great things. For the ensuing year Mr. W. T. Pickering was again elected president, Mr. H. Blaimires, vice-president, Mr. S. M. Ainley treasurer, and Messrs. S. Taylor and W. Clennett auditors. Mr. N. Rayner was unanimously re-elected secretary. The president is also the Yorkshire Union delegate. After the general business, the vice-president handed over the prizes won at several shows during the year, and in doing so addressed remarks of encouragement and congratulation, and spoke of the pride they must feel in receiving those prizes. Mr. W. T. Hall obtained the gold medal for the champion section, and as an old-time breeder and fancier of the "straight 'uns," he is to be congratulated. Mr. W. T. Pickering has pulled off a similar memento for the novice section, whilst Mr. H. Pollard took the silver medal as runner-up. A discussion respecting F. F. shows took place, and the first Saturday in June and July were the dates selected.—N. RAYNER, hon. secretary.

THE YOUNG NATURALIST.

Prizes of 1s. and two of 6d. each will be given each week for the best three anecdotes about birds written on postcards. Competitors must be children under sixteen years of age, and must state from where stories are taken.

Two stars indicate the Winning Contribution; one star the runners up.

In and Out of Distress.

A natural history student had the following remarkable experience with a Blue Jay. He and a party of friends were having a picnic at Stanton Drew, a village about seven miles from Bristol. They bivouaced in a small wood, near a stream. While there they heard piercing cries as from a bird in distress. These continued so long that two of the party proceeded in the direction from whence the noises came, to investigate. They had not gone far when the bird met them, still uttering these distressful cries. They called gently to it, and after a time it came to them, when one of them stretched out his hand and caught it. It proved to be a Jay. On examining the bird's mouth they found a growth at the back of the tongue, and as this interfered with its feeding, one held the bird while the other cut out the growth with a pair of pocket scissors. It was a wart-like substance, connected with the tongue by a narrow junction. They gave it something to eat and then let it go. Was not this cry an appeal to them to relieve it?—Sent by Edwin Atkinson (age 13), 158, Abel Street, Burnley.

*A Parent Bird's Love.

During a stay in the country a boy friend of mine caught a young Thrush which he put in a cage in the window. Next day, and for a few days, the mother Thrush came and fluttered around the window until her young one was released, when they both flew off together, thus showing the parent bird's love.—Sent by David Duguid (age 13), 28, Bedford Place, Aberdeen.

*The Blind Woman's Guide.

An old woman who had a gander, taught it that whenever the church bells rang on Sunday he must take in his bill the corner of his mistress's apron, and accompany her to church. The bird well fulfilled his charge, and as soon as he had led his mistress to church he would go and feed in an adjoining meadow until the close of the service, when he returned to the church door and led the old woman home.—Taken from "Children's Sunshine," and sent by Willie Chattle (age 10), 36, Rake Head, Stackstead.

At meeting held March 9th, Mr. C. C. Blackshaw (Altrincham) gave a lecture on Borders, in which he gave some good advice to beginners especially. After some discussion, in which Messrs. Odell, Aspinall, Jones, Morris, Pike, and Clarke took part, Mr. Aspinall proposed, and Mr. Jackson seconded, that the best thanks be given to Mr. Blackshaw for his very able lecture.—JOHN DAVEY, Secretary.

NORTHERN BRITISH BIRD & M.C.

Annual meeting held March 17th, in Lockhart's Cafe, 65, Granger Street, Newcastle. Business was commenced by enrolling new members. That ardent fancier, Mr. T. C. Crawhall, was accepted as a member. It was proposed by Mr. Maddisen and seconded by Mr. McKenzie, that we draw for cups, viz., British, Mules, and foreign birds. After deciding upon the cups, the report and balance-sheet were then gone into. Messrs. G. Taylor and Curry, as auditors, gave their report, and it was decided to accept same. Presentation to medal winners: those present were Messrs. J. Maddison, J. McKenzie, G. Graham, C. J. Pettersen, and C. Waters. Mr. Currah being asked to hand over the foreign bird cup to Mr. McKenzie, said it gave him great pleasure to perform the duty, as it was the second cup he handed over to Mr. McKenzie, and he wished him every success in the forthcoming show season. Mr. McKenzie, in responding, said he was proud of being the successful exhibitor, and it gave him the greatest of pleasure to be amongst so many fanciers where so much friendly spirit existed. He wished the society every success. Election of office-bearers resulted as follows:—President, Mr. W. J. Taylor; vice-presidents, Messrs. J. T. Harris, T. Robson, J. T. Porteous, G. Davidson, Dr. O'Neal, J. W. Nicholson, and that hard-working and true fancier, Mr. Currah, who replied thanking the members for the honour they had conferred upon him; Chairman, Mr. J. Shepherd; vice-chairman, Mr. Curry; committee, Messrs. P. J. Maddison, T. C. Crawhall, J. McKenzie, E. Atkinson, J. Irving, G. Taylor, J. R. Slack, A. Story, G. Graham, C. Waters, M. C. Potts, T. Appleby, C. J. Pettersen, and M. Vanner; auditors, Messrs. G. Taylor, W. Curry; secretary and treasurer, J. Bertram, 95, Gainshro' Grove, Newcastle-on-Tyne. It was agreed to hold a table show at next meeting, four classes to be provided, viz., Goldfinch-Bullfinch, Linnet, Greenfinch, A.O.S., Field-Moulted, Mr. Slack to judge. A hearty vote of thanks was given, which brought a long and representative meeting to a close. Anyone desirous of becoming a member (subscription 2s. 6d.), please communicate with me.—J. BERTRAM, secretary.

HEREFORD F.A.

Annual Dinner.

Annual dinner held at the Shire Hall on March 18th, a company of over 100 sitting down under the presidency of Mr. P. R. Harrower, amongst those present being Councillors Wren, Baker, Hammond, and Partridge, Messrs. Dixon (2), Hammond (3), Stone, Fountain, Alexander, Bowman, Smith (4), Shepherd, Wigton, Fleming, Ball, Chalk, Scoley, Johns, Golding, Braund, Ilott, Price, Garratt, Pinkham, Waddington, Sharpe, Mitchell, Hall, Dunn, Bates, Poyser, Bardale, Ramsey, Drever, Wheatcroft, Farley, Hudspeth, Tomlinson, Welch, Hoare (2), Dickens, Cooper, Scales, Woodland, Denn, Howe, Seymour, Stout, Peck, Harry, Rose, Looker, House, etc.

After the loyal toasts had been honoured, the Chairman, in proposing the "Hertford Fanciers' Association," said that for five years they had been endeavouring to further the interests of breeders in Hertford and the district. They started the society with eleven members, went on to forty, then to sixty, now they boasted of 110, and thirty vice-presidents—men who were vice-presidents in deed as well as name. They had made good progress in working the association, and could boast of doing what few societies could, and that was to make a profit of £10 on their annual show. The success achieved was due to the strenuous endeavours of a most excellent treasurer, a hard-working secretary, and a most harmonious committee. It was a great pleasure to attend the meetings and see all working for the benefit of the association.—Mr. Ilott, the hon. treasurer, in response, said he was pleased to say the association was never in so sound a position as it was to-day.

Mr. Looker, the hon. sec., in his remarks, said it was said twelve months ago that they were going to the wall, but the set-back of last year had not broken their spirit nor dismayed them, for they had gone on working, and to-day were stronger than ever. Their present committee was the best they had ever had, all earnest and enthusiastic workers for the society, and whilst they had such, and with Messrs. Harrower and Ilott as president and treasurer, they would go on to greater deeds.

Mr. Lloyd-Patch gave "The Judges," and remarked that in considering the work of the judges, which was at all times most difficult, they should ask themselves how many of us are infallible? The greatest criticism of the judges came from the novices, who often thought they knew more than the judges. As fanciers they should be sportsmen, and as sportsmen take the judges' ruling in good spirit, knowing that the judges had wider knowledge and experience. The older they got the more they would find they had to learn, and the more they learnt the less inclined they would be to criticise the work of the judges. He held the judges in great respect, and it was his ambition to one day be a judge himself, and if he could he second to such judges as they had at Hertford he should count himself a good one.—Mr. C. A. House responded. Other toasts were "Donors and Subscribers," "The Chairman," "The Visitors," and "The Press." During the evening Messrs. A. Pinkham, Harry Hall, and Finlay Dunn contributed to the enjoyment of the company.

ARDWICK AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held March 16th, at headquarters, when Mr. R. B. Fryer (Manchester) gave a washing exhibition. There was a large attendance of fanciers and friends. He explained all the while he was washing the first bird the different methods that experienced fanciers adopted in getting the birds up for exhibition. The one adopted by Mr. Fryer himself was greatly appreciated, and everyone seemed interested and eager to gain as much information as possible. There were a few questions which Mr. Fryer answered in a straightforward manner. A very instructive and interesting meeting was concluded by a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Fryer, who promised to, at some future date, give us a lecture on Mule breeding.—J. SPENCER, Secretary.

SOUTH WEST LONDON C.B.S.

On March 18th Mr. Robson delivered a lecture at the Plough Hotel, St. John's Hill, Clapham Junction, his subject being "Selection, breeding, and feeding during the breeding season." Those who were absent missed a lot. The lecturer dwelt quite threequarters of an hour upon the various points in regard to selection—a subject in itself so great and of such importance that I doubt whether many of our greatest breeders really think out for themselves the many points that should be thought out when pairing their stock up for breeding. The members very much appreciated the knowledge imparted to them. After the lecture members asked questions and raised many points of interest, which Mr. Robson answered. At the close Mr. McLaughlin proposed a hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer, which was seconded and carried unanimously. Mr. Robson proposed a vote of thanks to the chairman, which was also seconded and carried. This brought a very enjoyable evening to a close.—LILLEY, Hon. Sec.

Y.C.C. OF IRELAND.

Annual general meeting held on St. Patrick's night in the Douglas Hotel, Eden Quay, Dublin, the chairman (Mr. J. J. Cloke) presiding. The report and balance-sheet were passed.—Mr. Gillen raised the point that the balance-sheet had not been audited in accordance with the rules of the club. Mr. Cloke explained that the reason the financial statement had not been audited was that the auditors had not, owing to an oversight, been appointed at the previous annual meeting; the committee had no power to appoint auditors. The balance-sheet showed that after discharging all liabilities, there was a balance to the credit of the club of 6s. 10d. The conditions governing the Closed Ring Cup were agreed to, as were also the new rules proposed by Mr. Devins and Mr. McDonnell. Thus in future the competition for the challenge and novice cups, and also the Closed Ring Cup, will be confined to colour-fed birds, and where two persons reside in the one house both must show in the champion classes. Mr. Devins was declared the winner of the Open Cup, and Mr. Coyne runner-up, and the Novice Cup was won by Mr. Fleming, the runner-up being Mr. Birse. The election of officers resulted as follows:—President, Major P. Trotter, R.A.M.C.; vice-presidents, Messrs. Barclay, Rowe, and Bray (re-elected); chairman, Mr. Cloke (ditto); hon. treasurer, Mr. R. F. Duigenan, 13, Gardiner's-place, Dublin (re-elected); hon. secretary, Mr. J. P. Rooney, 41, Munster-st., Dublin; committee, Messrs. Lambert, Kenny, McDonnell, and J. P. Rooney (all re-elected), and Messrs. C. A. O'Reilly, Dowling, Carroll, and Hyland (Dublin); Messrs. Devins, Hawkins, C. J. Mulligan, McQuaide, South, Keating, Thompson, and Dr. Lavery (Provincial). Mr. Rooney having been elected hon. secretary, a vacancy will occur on the committee, which will meet this (Saturday) evening at 51, Raymond-st., Dublin, at eight o'clock.—J. P. ROONEY, Hon. secretary.

WESTERN COUNTIES O.S.

At general meeting held at Boro' Restaurant, on March 15th, a table show of Linnets and Goldfinches was held, 30 cages being staged. In the Goldfinch class the judge, Mr. L. S. B. Clarke, in his critique of the exhibits, specially commented on the winning bird (Mr. Pridham's) as evidencing great care and attention having been paid to its condition; also on the 3rd prize (Mr. Large's), as being very promising for a fresh caught bird. Good birds were also shown by Messrs. Wills, Cheshire, and Woodland. The Linnet class contained two exceptionally fine birds, viz., 1st (Woodland), and 2nd (Pridham), and there was a great diversity of opinion as to their proper placing. Mr. Clarke, in reply to questions, stated that he gave preference to winner as it was of better size, had better head and pencilling; he also allowed that the second had the richer colour, but it appeared to have very indistinct crest pencilling, owing, he considered, to colour feed. Other exhibitors in the Linnet class were Messrs. Rowe, Large, Wills, and Pope. Mr. Clarke then gave a few hints how to moult and keep Goldfinches in condition, and stated that he considered a diet of hemp seed only to be injudicious. He preferred a mixture of hemp, canary, teazle, go'd of pleasure, and maw seed. He also strongly advised giving wild seed of every description that the Finch would eat; his method being to take a country walk occasionally and gather anything he thought of use. In early spring, before the seeds were fit, he recommended young dandelion leaves and shepherd's purse. Mr. Clarke also laid great stress on the question of a good supply of grit, and said that he had found on post mortem examination of Finches that had died, that very often the gizzard was almost destitute of grit. He was a firm believer in always hanging up a bath for his Finches, and stated that he had found that the fact of having a bath hung on the cage often would induce a Finch that would otherwise roost hanging to the front wires to either remain on perch or roost close to the bath. In proposing a vote of thanks to Mr. Clarke, the chairman (Mr. C. Dart) said he was pleased to see the good attendance that evening, and the evident interest shown in the doings of the society.—THOS. POPE, Hon. Sec.

I find CAGE BIRDS, a very helpful paper, and full of good suggestions, writes Mr. T. Cross (Manchester).

Kindly note, writes Mr. J. Bertie, that I have removed to 521, Woodborough Road, Mapperley, Nottingham.

Mr. Montague E. Feltham (late of Boscombe), writes that he is now residing at 128, Commercial Road, Bournemouth.

The Penzance and Dis. F.A., writes Mr. J. Pearce Sampson, will hold its annual show on November 10th and 11th, when Mr. C. A. House will judge the cage birds.

The Hartlepools C.B.S. draw, writes Mr. H. J. L. Williams, the hon. secretary, will not be published until next week, owing to some of the books not having been returned.

In Mr. John Boxall's (of Brighton) advertisement of Norwich Canaries in our last issue there was a printer's error. "Norwich cocks 4s. 6d.," should have read "Norwich cocks 7s. 6d."

The Lockeraig F. and F.A. (Fife), writes Mr. Robert Balloch, the secretary, will hold their first annual show on December 4th. Will all Fife secretaries please note so that there will be no clashing of dates?

We regret to learn that Mr. W. Hodson, the popular hon. secretary of the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S., is laid aside with a severe attack of influenza. All will wish him a speedy and complete restoration to health.

An important purchase of light Muling hens, with a few cock birds, has just been completed by Mr. W. Rudd, the well-known bird specialist of Norwich, from a noted (fifteen-year) breeder in the Midlands.

OBITUARY

Mr. ROBERT ADAMSON (Glasgow).

It is with the deepest regret, writes Mr. Allan Chalmers (Kirkintilloch), that I have to announce the death of the esteemed secretary of the Scottish Crest Club, Mr. Robert Adamson, of 56, Petershill Road, Glasgow, who passed away on March 16th. He died from that fell disease pneumonia. His loss to the S.C.C. will be felt very much, as he was always willing to help to further its interests. Though not an extensive exhibitor himself, he was a thorough Crest enthusiast. His early demise at the age of 34 years will be felt more keenly in his home circle, where he leaves a widow and four young children (the oldest being seven years old), who, I feel confident, have the sympathy of fanciers in general in their sad bereavement.

One of the "oldest inhabitants" of Roath Park, Cardiff, is said to be a black and white Blackbird. Its head is white, and so is a part of its body. The bird has been there for two years, and it is whiter this year than last.

We hear that Mr. W. P. Barnes (Grantham), is one of the judges elected to officiate at the annual show of the York C.B.S., to be held on October 29th and 30th, and is the judge elect for the Consett (co. Durham) Show on November 13th.

We are holding two nest feather shows this season, one on June 12th, 1909, and the other on July 31st, writes Mr. Benj. Bullough, hon. secretary, Southport and Dis. C.B.C. Mr. J. W. Cleminson (Preston), is engaged to judge the first one.

A good substitute for egg-food will be welcomed by many bird-breeders, and to such we can recommend the "Woodland Bird Milk," of the Creamery Co., Garstang, Lancs. (a preparation in powder form), which has been tried and found excellent by noted breeders.

Owing to pressure of business, writes Mr. Albert V. Lane, Mr. Albert B. Forse has been obliged to resign the secretaryship of the Walthamstow F.A. In future all communications for the association should be addressed to me as hon. secretary, at 9, College Road, Walthamstow.

The Pendlebury, Swinton and Dis. Canary and British Bird Society, writes Mr. Alex. Donnelly, the secretary, have arranged to hold meetings every fortnight. The next meeting is to be held at headquarters "Blue Ribbon Hall," April 1st, at 7.30., when all members are asked to attend.

Two fanciers were journeying from Wales to a recent show, writes "Taffy," and in the afternoon, just after leaving a certain junction, one of them remarked: "What a red sunset!" "Yes," replied the other, "it has been partaking of Ramsden's pepper and has come out a red 'un."

The pictures of my Bullfinch and my Goldfinch which you published in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. Frank Jones, jun. (Wrexham), I was very pleased with. I am sure great credit is due to Mr. Norman upon the natural and life-like way in which the birds are drawn. Please thank him on my behalf.

The judges elected for our show, to be held on October 30th, writes Mr. J. Logan, hon. secretary of the Dysart C.B.S., are as follows: Messrs. J. Holmes (Edinburgh), for Norwich; G. Hyslop (Stirling), for Border Fancies; J. Brown (Edinburgh), for British and foreign birds; and D. Low (Dundee), for Scotch Fancies.

At a meeting to be held at the "Old Boar's Head," Middleton, on March 27th, at 7 o'clock, writes Mr. W. Adams, sec. of the Lancashire C.A., we are having Mr. Barrass' articles on Lancashires read, and as Mr. Barrass is recognised as one of the best men amongst Lancashire fanciers, we hope we shall have a crowded meeting which, I may say, is open to all, whether members or not. This being about the time to commence breeding operations, the meeting is sure to be full of interest. If time allows a discussion will afterwards follow.

At a committee meeting of the cage bird and fur department in connection with the Redruth Exhibition, write Messrs. Opie and Kemp, hon. secs. of those departments, Mr. J. North, of Reading, was unanimously elected judge of the cage-bird section at the forthcoming shows on June 30th and July 1st.

A reliable insect powder is a most useful thing to have in one's birdroom, especially during the nesting season, and the "Parasito Powder" being advertised in our columns by Mr. S. C. Rhodes (56, Upper Walthamstow Road, Essex), should, judging by the sample sent us, find a ready sale amongst bird-keepers.

We are now preparing our manual for 1909, writes Mr. B. F. Forse, hon. secretary of the Leyton and Dis. C.B.A., and I should be glad to hear from any fancier desirous of joining the association. Members who have not yet paid their subscription for 1908 should do so at once to ensure their names appearing in the list of members.

I have resigned the secretaryship of the Morriston and Dis. C.B.S., writes Mr. D. Jeremy, as I find that all my time will be taken up otherwise this year. The new secretary is Mr. W. H. Lewis, Timothy Row, Morriston, near Swansea, and all future correspondence in connection with the society must be addressed to him.

The Exeter and District C.B.S. have issued a capital programme of events for 1909, which includes lectures by Messrs. D. Browning (on "Breeding and Showing of the Crest"), and W. J. Smith (on "Wild Birds and Their Seeds"); an impromptu debate; a ramble; a "convivial" evening, etc. The secretary is Mr. R. H. Folley, 28, Rosebery Road, Exeter.

We have secured the services of Messrs. J. H. Roe and R. Barrass (Rochdale) as judges for our annual open show, to be held on November 6th, writes Mr. Wm. Adams, hon. secretary of the Rochdale Good Intent C.B.S. We are again holding the exhibition in the Parish Church Schools, and the committee are hoping to make it one of the best one-day shows in Lancashire.

About a fortnight ago, writes Mr. H. Deeming (Wolverhampton), I stopped to look in at a newsagent's, and seeing CAGE BIRDS there I thought I would buy it. I was so interested in it that by the time I had finished reading it I had made up my mind to go in for Canary breeding. I shall now be a regular reader of your valuable paper, as I think it will be very useful to me in my new hobby.

Through lack of funds and interest in the Nortbern Norwich Plainhead Club, and owing to championship bowl being won outright this season, the members have decided to abandon the club in the meantimo, writes Mr. Anthony Hay, the hon. secretary. As my duties as secretary now cease, anyone requiring any information respecting the club should communicate with me before the end of April, all letters to be addressed to 30, Main Road, Tweedmouth, Berwick-in-Tweed.

I arrived quite safely in the "old country" about two weeks ago, writes Mr. C. Henfrey (East Kirkby), having had a very pleasant journey. I had to leave my place in Strathcona, Canada, in a hurry, as I had received very bad news respecting an accident which had occurred to my father. I am glad to say, however, that he is progressing favourably. I mean to go in for birds properly now. I take in CAGE BIRDS every Friday. I have learned quite a lot from it already, and am always anxious for Friday to come.

The rule book and programme for the 1909 season of the London and Provincial O.S. reaches us from the secretary, Mr. H. E. Tringham (Old Barge House Wharf, Commercial Road, London, S.E.). A very neat little production, it contains a splendid list of lectures, instructive washing exhibitions and competitions for the delectation of members. Included among the lectures we note a cinematograph display by Mr. Kearton, the celebrated ornithologist, which should be a great attraction; also a lecture by Mr. Wesley T. Page, on "Foreign Birds."

I resigned the secretaryship of the Spen Valley C.B.S., writes Mr. R. Bennett, at our general meeting on March 15th. Mr. J. Lewis, of Howard Park, Cleckheaton, has been elected in my place. Mr. J. W. Wharton was elected president in place of Mr. J. M. Greig (resigned). It was resolved to offer for members' shows, 1909 and 1910 a silver cup as first prize, to be won three times in all; also a gold medal value 21s. Our late president (Mr. J. M. Greig) very generously promised a silver rose bowl as second prize, to be won three times in all. The society also gives a medal, value 10s. 6d., as second prize, and a third prize, medal value 5s., for British bird classes, soft billed bird medal, value 5s., and a hard billed bird medal, value 5s. All communications in future in connection with the society must be addressed to Mr. J. Lewis, the hon. secretary.

"Bird Notes"—the journal of the Foreign Bird Club—for March, constitutes the first part of volume 7, and is full of interesting reading. The frontispiece is an excellent reproduction of a picture by Mr. H. Goodchild of the living specimen of the Great or Giant Barbet in the possession of Mr. S. M. Townsend, who contributes notes on the species. Other notes are also supplied by Mr. W. T. Page. Lady Dunleath gives us some "Miscellaneous Notes (1908) from the Ballywalter Park Aviaries," which are supplemented by two photographs taken by the authoress. Mr. R. Suggitt's article on "Experiences of Foreign Bird Importation," and Mr. O. Millsum's on the "Parasitical Habits of the Silky Cowbird," afford capital fare, and there are also some editorial notes on the foreign bird section of the last Crystal Palace Show.

The North London C.B.A. have issued quite a nice little manual for 1909. It contains a list of fixtures for the year, including many very interesting lectures; the rules and regulations of the society and the show rules; and a list of members' names and addresses. The secretary is Mr. R. P. Harper, 26, Brighton Road, Stoke Newington, N.

Compressed hair is claimed to be one of the most perfect nesting materials known, and Mr. T. C. Crawhall (St. George's Terrace, Newcastle-on-Tyne), has sent us a sample of the very excellent hair which he is advertising in our columns this week, with prizes for users of the same. Those who have never seen this compressed hair should make a point of doing so.

Two or three weeks ago, writes the Rev. Bernard Wilton ((Middlesbro'), I received an offer of a Cirl Bunting from an unknown correspondent. I asked him to forward the bird and I would send cash or exchange. He did so, but unfortunately I lost his address in the interval. I have been expecting him to write again; but he has not done so. I should be glad if he would kindly communicate with me.

"Popular Bird" Competition.

A letter from a correspondent has led to a little competition being put before our readers this week. Particulars will be found in the correspondence pages and should not be overlooked.

Scottish Crest Club.

Owing to the sudden and regrettable demise of Mr. Robert Adamson, tho secretary of the Scottish Crest Club, writes Mr. Allan Chalmers, all future correspondence in connection with the club may be addressed to me at 69, Hillhead, Kirkintilloch, until a new secretary has been appointed.

Yorkshire Canary Club.

The nominations of officers for 1909-10, must be in the hands of the secretary not later than March 31st. Will members kindly fill up the form in the centre of the club's handbook and forward at once to the secretary?—JOHN GREAVES, hon. secretary, Y.C.C., 279, Hollings Road, Bradford, Yorks.

Yorkshire Union of C.B.S.

A meeting of delegates will be held on March 27th, at the Market Tavern, Bradford. Business: rumoured irregularity of late Union shows; balance-sheet; auditors' report; scrutineers' report of ballot; ballot result of judges for open show, etc., etc. This is the final meeting for the old delegates.—SAMUEL DEAN, hon. secretary, Y.U. of C.B.S., 6, Ashmount, Gt. Horton, Bradford.

A Yorkshire Matter.

At the next meeting of the Yorkshire Union (held to-day, Saturday), a case of alleged irregularity at Union shows is to be brought forward. We understand that the irregularity referred to is a rumoured case of a novice showing the birds of a champion exhibitor in novice classes. We hear that the novice states that he bought the birds in question, and that the professional borrowed them to exhibit at a members' show with the object of winning a cup.

The Welsh Cage Bird Club.

The annual general meeting will be held on April 3rd, at the Ship and Bell, Merthyr, at 3.30 o'clock, when the balance-sheet for the year, also for the club show, will be presented. Other business is as follows: Proposed alteration of rules; club show for 1909; refusal of entries; presentation of cups and medals, also cash to those who preferred this to medals. Nominations will be received for the various offices. At the close of the business Mr. T. H. Melhuish has promised to give a lecture on "Breeding and Management." Anyone wishing to join the club will oblige by sending on their names, with 3s. subscription, to me.—D. H. TEDSTONE, hon. secretary, Welsh C.B.C., 4, George Street, Brecon.

Our "Ladder of Progress" Competition.

We desire to call the attention of our readers to a competition we have instituted this week, and to ask their kindly co-operation in its carrying out. We want to obtain the names and addresses of keepers of pet cage-birds—every keeper, if possible—who have not as yet had our journal, CAGE BIRDS, brought to their notice. There must be many such, and who, if they but knew the wider delights of the hobby open to them, would take it up with thoroughness and enthusiasm. By co-operating in our competition, then, readers will be helping our hobby, helping themselves, and helping the bird-keepers whose addresses they obtain. We will give one of our coloured picture postcards in exchange for every name and address of a bona-fide keeper of cage-birds, who has never yet heard of this journal, which is sent in to us. In addition, we offer a first prize of £4 (cash), a second prize of £1 (cash), and a handsome pair of framed plates of birds to the three readers sending in the three highest lists of such names and addresses. Full particulars, and a few hints for intending competitors, will be found on page 327.

The Colour-feeding of Birds.

By J. W. RAMSDEN.

A Lecture delivered before the members and friends of the London and Provincial O.S. on March 18th.

We have met together this evening to consider the question of colour-feeding. A more important subject, in my opinion, is breeding for colour, for unless you breed for colour it is practically impossible to colour-feed to perfection. Breeding for colour is a subject too often neglected, and before speaking on colour-feeding, I should like to say a few words on colour-breeding.

Breeding for Colour.

To breed for colour, it is important to have a certain amount of green blood in your birds. Green stock birds are somewhat hard to purchase, but they are comparatively easy seller; but having bred a green stock bird, you have to rely on the good faith of the seller but having bred a green stock bird, you know exactly what you have got. To obtain an ideal green stock bird, I advise you to pair two heavily-variegated yellows together. For the moment, I am thinking of the Norwich Plainhead. Let the two heavily-variegated yellows be birds of good type or substance, and of good quality of feather. A yellow green bred from two such birds will prove to be of wonderful value in breeding for colour. He will be a bird of colour and quality, and of the rich golden green so seldom seen nowadays. There are greens and greens. The bird known as the Liverpool green is not the bird needed—that bird is too much of a grass green, and is not nearly so rich in colour as the green bird I have advised you to breed.

Having bred your green stock bird, mate him to a clear buff hen, and the produce of the union will be some rare coloured birds, especially the yellow cocks. Mr. J. H. Payne, when speaking on the Norwich Plainhead, advised breeders to double-yellow, and reserve for stock any buffs bred from the two yellows. I agree with Mr. Payne, for a buff bred from two yellows is full of colour and a most suitable bird to mate with the green previously referred to. The young from such birds are teeming in colour and quality, and when colour fed are what our show reporters like to call "balls of fire." Fanciers sometimes say to me, "I have colour-fed some twenty to thirty birds, and have all shades of colour." I reply, "Exactly so, for according to the amount of colour bred, into your birds, so you must expect appearances, even after you have colour-fed on the finest feed procurable." You must breed for colour, as well as feed for colour.

Some fanciers endeavour to improve the colour of their birds by the introduction of Cinnamon blood, but experience has satisfied me that this is not a satisfactory method. The Cinnamon will improve the quality of the feather, but more often than not produces a colour that may be described as salmon-pink-yellow, instead of the golden yellow required.

The Advantages of Colour-feeding.

On the question of feeding for colour, I am afraid there is very little to be said that has not been said before, and fully reported in the Fancy Press. Colour feeding has been practised now for some 35 years. It was in the year 1873 that the late Mr. Bemrose first announced to the Fancy that the sole agent used in obtaining the wonderful colour in his birds was cayenne pepper, and since that date the majority of exhibitors have colour-fed either on pepper or some other colouring agent. It is an undisputed fact that the colour-feeder has an immense advantage over the non-feeder—an advantage he has ever held where both have started in the race on the same terms as regards the quality of the birds. There is no doubt that colour-feeding will always be practised, because of this advantage, no matter what rules clubs or societies may pass to the contrary. We will now consider what is the best agent for colour-feeding. Drugs, fruits, flowers, and wines have and can be used, but to-day the article most frequently used is what is known to most of you as tasteless pepper.

As there still remains some doubt in the minds of many fanciers as to what tasteless pepper really is, and also whether it is really harmless to the birds, I propose to go fully into the question, so that you may rest assured that in tasteless pepper you are using a fruit that is perfectly harmless to the most fragile and delicate bird.

Tasteless pepper is obtained from the pods of several species and varieties of the Genus Capsicum—the same family of plants as the tomato, egg plant, etc. Capsicums are cultivated in many parts of the world, and of recent years have been grown and reported on by the Missouri Botanical Society at their gardens in Missouri, St. Louis. Their report is most interesting, as the following extracts will show:—"All garden varieties which were procurable, together with numerous so-called species, have been cultivated at the garden for four years, furnishing most valuable material in the prosecution of the work on the Genus Capsicum." It would take far too long for me to wade through the report on some 54 species, so I will first quote one or two items of general interest, in order to prove that Capsicums are harmless as a bird food; also the reports and descriptions of the species most suitable for bird feeding. In this report Dr. Rusby writes:—"I have seen a good deal of the Genus Capsicum in South America, and have observed a great tendency to variation. I have seen but few well distinguished forms, and about these are grouped hosts, presenting every shade of variation in size, colour, form and surface planes of fruit. There are corresponding differences in pungency and flavour, in detecting which the natives are very expert. Each man will have some cherished plant, that to him is very distinct and far superior to anything that his neighbours can boast." Mr. Irish, in the same report, writes that the economic value of the fruit has long been known. Tho southern natives used it as much in ancient times as they do at present. In Spain and India, as early as the sixteenth century, the fruit was employed in dressing meats, and was supposed by many to be very valuable for dyeing. "Apart from its value as a food, Capsicum is considered a very healthful bird food, and is used to some extent for this purpose. (It is not stated whether Capsicums were used as a colour food, but simply as a healthful bird food.) Many of the Capsicums are more or less used either in pickles or in the raw or cooked state, the milder sorts being much preferred by northern consumers, and tho more pungent ones by the southern people. They are sliced, and either mixed with salads or served like tomatoes, with vinegar and salt."

Different Varieties Described.

I will now give you the descriptions of the varieties we are interested in. First, our old friend the pungent Capsicum, known to you as Natal or cayenne, here described as Capsicum annuam acuminatum. This variety is cultivated to the best state of perfection in Natal. I produce a plate and some of the pods, also some of the pepper for your own inspection. Secondly, we have two varieties that are only slightly pungent, viz., Capsicum annuum longum Cardinal, and Capsicum annuum longum elephant's trunk. These two varieties are somewhat acrid and coarse. The pods are a deep dull red, and the flesh somewhat pungent.

Of the varieties known as "sweet," "mild," or "tasteless," I propose to mention but two or three. There are many, but the others will not interest us. First is Capsicum annuum grossum, "The Bell." Secondly, "Sweet Spanish," and thirdly "Sweet Mountain." These are the smaller plants, bearing larger and milder fruits than the others, and are the plants from which the better qualities of tasteless pepper are obtained. I show you the plates, dried pods, also the pepper. This you will observe to be very fine both in colour and quality.

Some of the more prolific species of Capsicum bear pods that are not so deep in colour. These are very useful for yellow feeding, but not deep enough for red feeding. This pale pepper is cheap, and when sold for red colour feeding is usually artificially coloured. I can show you here two samples, one genuine, one faked. From the colour I shall obtain from each on a clean piece of paper you will be able to tell the amount of artificial colour used. I have often been asked if the artificial colours used are harmful to the birds. I am of the opinion that if colour feeding lasted for a week only, no great harm would be done, but as it lasts weeks, or even months, I am of the opinion that it is harmful. Arsenic and strychnine can be used by us in minute doses to advantage, but if taken in excessive doses daily, or several times daily, as birds take colour food, it would probably finish us off in the same way that these faked peppers will finish off the birds that are fed on them.

The Plants from which Colour Food is obtained.

The Oil in Tasteless Pepper.

Before proceeding to the actual process of colour-feeding the birds, there is one more point I must refer to, re tasteless pepper, and that is with reference to the amount of oil it contains. According to the species, age, and dryness of the pod before grinding, so the proportion of oil varies. Upon analysis, tasteless peppers have been found to contain from 4 per cent. to 17 per cent. of oil. I prefer a pepper containing about 12½ to 15 per cent. of oil, as oil certainly produces a gloss upon the feathers. At the same time, if you have a pepper containing 15 per cent. of oil, you would only court disaster if you added 2oz. of oil to the pound, as is so often advised. This would cause an excess of oil, and probably cause a slackness of feather in the bird. If, however, you have a dry pepper, then 2ozs. of oil could be added to the pound, using for preference the finest sublime salad oil. This, if the quality is right, is expensive, but the best is always the cheapest in the end. Pepper containing the full proportion of oil has a better appearance, and apparently contains more colour than the dry peppers. Some of these dry peppers I have shown you would look 10 per cent. better if I added 15 per cent. of oil to them.

The Use of Cayenne Pepper.

Now, we often read in the Fancy papers that various gentlemen advise the use of hot cayenne pepper for colour feeding. I don't agree with them. In my opinion, feeding on hot cayenne is wrong, excepting within certain limits. If we turn to "Squire's Companion" to the British Pharmacopœia, we find the medicinal properties of Capsicum fruit, or cayenne pepper described as follows:—"A powerful stimulant, used chiefly as a condiment; given in intermittent fevers with quinine, in low forms of fever, diarrhœa, cholera and in the black vomit of hot climates, also in alcoholic dyspepsia, dose half to one grain of the powder." There are in one ounce of cayenne pepper 437 full doses for a human being, and yet we are told to use hot and cold pepper in equal parts in colour-feeding our birds. Cayenne pepper is a caustic irritant, and to feed a bird on it for two or three months at a stretch must be injurious to the bird.

I have on previous occasions stated that I did not believe in colour-feeding on cayenne pepper, and in consequence I receive some scores of letters on the subject from well-known fanciers who, with one exception, were against me. I was invited to inspect rooms where birds were being colour-fed on hot pepper, and I accepted the invitations. I found birds being colour-fed on 75 per cent. tasteless and 25 per cent. cayenne pepper. One ailing bird I asked permission to kill and examine. This was granted, and on opening the bird I found the intestines inflamed and slightly ulcerated, due, in my opinion, to the excessive use of cayenne, given in the colour food. In another room I visited, the room of a well-known Yorkshire fancier, I found some 300 birds being fed on tasteless pepper, to which had been added one ounce finest Natal to each pound of the tasteless. My host explained that he found tasteless pepper relaxing to his birds, and the addition of the one ounce of cayenne corrected this, and the warmth of the feed appeared most gratifying and comforting to the bird. I examined many of the birds, and found them in perfect health, and was bound to admit that appearances were against me. I saw this fancier's birds again after the moult, and they were really a splendid colour. A large number of fanciers have assured me that they obtained better results when they added from half to one ounce best cayenne with each pound of tasteless pepper, some commencing to do so when their birds were about half-way through the moult, others starting to do so immediately the moult commenced. From these experiences I am forced to admit that cayenne is not injurious when used in very small quantities.

Colour-feeding Not Injurious to Birds.

A vote was taken by one of the Fancy journals a short time ago on the subject of colour-feeding. Readers were asked to say if they considered colour-feeding injurious to the health of the birds, and the result of the vote was "No," by a large majority. Strange to say, 740 voted for colour-feeding being abolished, against 710—a majority of 30—the chief reasons being: 1, expense; 2, trouble caused. Now, it costs 6d. to colour-feed a bird—whether this is too expensive I leave you to decide. Trouble? Yes, lots of it.

To colour-feed properly, your birds must have daily attention, often at a time when you could be away holiday-making. Leave your birds on seed only for a few days, and the result will be that they will be patchy in colour. We, therefore, admit that colour-feeding is perhaps expensive, and certainly causes a great deal of trouble. I do not propose to treat on the question of alleged cruelty, as no man in his senses could maintain for a moment that colour-feeding, as practised in these days, could by any stretch of imagination be termed cruel.

Hints on Pairing Up Birds and Rearing Young Ones.

By J. C. BARNES.

This article I shall endeavour to make as plain and as easily understandable as possible. Much matter, at one time or another, has been written concerning the breeding of birds, and one feels it difficult to speak of something which shall be fresh. Many times have I had the pleasure of placing before the Fancy (especially the younger fanciers) hints of various descriptions appertaining to the delightful hobby of Canary culture, so I cannot conscientiously crave indulgence as a "novice" at such business, but at the same time I may be allowed to express the hope that a few of my readers may find this present article helpful. It is to the beginner in the Fancy that I wish to convey a serviceable hint or two, if within my power. Years ago I was myself a novice, ever ready to absorb advice, and many items I picked up greatly helped me. My advice to budding young fanciers is: Never think you know it all; always be open to learn. When amongst the older fanciers, keep your ears at attention.

Before Pairing.

Now to business: In the first place perhaps it will be advisable to outline briefly the methods I pursue previous to the pairing up of my stock.

The flight cages accommodate most of my hens for a matter of two months or even more previous to matrimonial duties commencing. Exercise of this description is beneficial in almost every way. One great benefit is that it keeps your hens from getting too fat, therefore assisting very materially against egg binding. In many instances egg binding is brought about by hens being too fat internally.

Should I find any of my cock birds putting more flesh on than I consider good, or which I think might interfere with the fertilisation of the eggs, then into the flights they go also. A fortnight or so will put matters right, as a rule. Unfertile eggs can be caused by the male bird being too corpulent.

All birds have their good and bad ways, so study their "tempers," and use your discretion. Some birds are very obstinate (like some human beings), and some are very vicious, almost exhausting one's patience. Still, by judicious management (of which I shall speak), the time comes when the "lion" may be led like a "lamb," and the "sinner" become a "saint," and all things go merrily as the proverbial marriage bells.

If at all possible, it is wise to keep the cocks in one room and hens in another. This, I know, is not convenient to the majority of fanciers, and where unworkable, keep the sexes as far away from each other as possible—out of each other's sight, as best you can.

When breeding for the show bench, judicious matching is necessary. The owner of the birds acts as the introducer of suitable partners, and officiates as parson at the "wedding festivities." His task often proves of a very difficult nature, should the birds have been kept where they can see, and make overtures to, each other. They will pick out partners they like, and a thousand to one such will be undesirable. This makes matters rather unpleasant when "Harry," who has been making love to "Harriet," has to have "Charlotte" forced on to him. Here come in squabbles and forced separations—sometimes even murder, should the eye of the owner be turned in other directions for too long a period. Do your best to avoid mishaps of this description.

Help One Another.

Naturally, previous to pairing up clean cages should be provided; this I need hardly mention. Whatever variety you favour, the standard of perfection, which all specialist clubs have, should be vividly before you. Cocks that are deficient in points that make up the ideal specimen, should have hens placed with them that are strong in these points. Say your male bird has a capital head, but fails in body properties, the hen must show a chubby, thick-set frame to counterbalance this defect. A cock bird, slovenly in carriage, should have a smart, lively partner. Correct matching tends to correct breeding; no other way spells success. Many fanciers (both old and young, I fear) make a sad mistake in not paying stricter attention to this item of items. Don't run away with the idea that because you have, say, a cock and hen bred from tip-top parents, that all required is to place them together and things will come out all serene. Oh, dear no! The birds must match each other, no matter what they're off.

Birds that do not possess robust constitutions find no accommodation in my rooms. You must have stamina; weakly birds are useless. Never breed with sickly specimens, no matter how well bred they may be. A castle built on rock will stand, but one built on sand will not. Put a good foundation into your strain by breeding with healthy specimens; then you will reap as reward strong, fine progeny.

No hard or fast line need be laid down as regards which of the birds (cock or hen) should be the senior. Of course, different fanciers hold different views; some prefer the male bird the older, others the female. For my own part I lean somewhat to the hen being the younger. I think that the progeny from a two-year-old cock and a young hen (unflighted) are both stronger and fill out better than do the youngsters from an unflighted cock and a two-year-old hen. One cannot, of course, always follow out a method of this kind, having to utilise the birds at command regardless of age limit, and I don't think any trouble need be anticipated in this respect.

Often I have been asked at what age I consider a hen past her best. My idea on this point is that when a hen has bred three years in succession, she has given of her very best. At times even a much older hen will throw winners, but such occasions crop up rarely. As regards the male side, I have on many occasions done well with birds five years old; at the same time, I prefer the cocks that have not seen so many "Valentine days." I really like a three-year-old bird better than any other, but four-year-old birds I certainly don't discard. From five-year-old birds I, as a rule, expect little, and am surprised when much crops up. Now I am speaking of breeding something worth looking at, and suitable for the show bench and stock cage. If breeding for songsters only, I should not be very particular respecting the age, as long as the birds were healthy.

The Date for Pairing Up.

As regards the most suitable date for placing one's birds together for breeding purposes, that varies somewhat. In the South of England, where the weather is more favourable, birds can be on the "war-path" at an earlier date than, say, those in the Midlands. The farther North one gets, the later should be the "wedding day." Whatever the district, however, the weather and the birds should be one's guides. At any time between the middle of March and the second week in April, a commencement can be made. This allows ample time for three nests to be taken before the moulting season steps in and puts an end to all the breeding operations.

Take care not to pair up too soon. Very early partnerships are often spoiled by East winds, chilly, frosty nights, and so on, which so often prevail early in the year. These things spell disaster, and account for hens becoming egg-bound and inflammation making its presence felt, while the cold makes the hens unable to deposit their eggs, or irregular in their laying, or refuse to sit if eggs are laid. Taking all things into consideration, the first week of April is about the best to commence in, providing the weather is of an inviting character; if at all unsettled it will pay to wait even a few days longer.

When Paired.

Feed the birds liberally when matched up. My egg food I make up as follows: The eggs should be boiled hard (about 15 minutes). When cold, chop up fine. Mix with bread crumbs (bread 3 or 4 days old is far preferable to new), in the proportion of 1 part egg and 2 parts of crumb (or biscuit, if you prefer it; I like bread best). Then add to this a little soft sugar and a pinch of maw seed. To each pair of birds give one teaspoonful per day. A little hemp seed once a day is also relished; about a teaspoonful to each pair.

When the birds have been together a matter of three days or so, hang inside the cage a nest-pan or box, also a little building material (dried moss and cowhair). If the birds are at all on good terms with each other, and in fit condition, they will utilise it to the best advantage; but should the reverse take place, you will have to deal with them according to the merits of the case. Some cock birds are very troublesome, and hens, too, can be very annoying.

Cooling His Ardour.

At times a cock bird will be found too vigorous and molesting the hen in a most ungentlemanly fashion, perhaps knocking her all over the place. When this takes place, it is well to place him in such a position that he can see the hen but cannot harm her. A double breeder, with the wire partition in the centre, answers well. Failing this, place the male bird in a wire cage (Yorkshire show cage or such like) and hang him on the front of the breeding cage. A few days like this often bring about the desired result and teach him to behave more considerately.

A cock bird may fail to fill the eggs, especially in the first round. Don't worry over-much; let him try again. If he be an unflighted bird (perhaps also a late hatched bird) maybe he is not properly matured. A little more time will assist such a bird. Birds that have attained to, say, 9 months, will more often than not prove all right.

On the other hand, you may have troubles with her "ladyship." She may apparently go on with her duties, but only poor results be attained. Again, she may be dilatory in the building of her nest, in the laying of her eggs, or in taking to her companion. All these failings are generally attributable to the hen not being "ready for action." In cases of this kind, take her away from her mate for a few days and feed her well, and the absence very often makes the "heart grow fonder," and the difficulty is overcome.

MY OUTDOOR AVIARY OF WAXBILLS.

By "BLUEBIRD."

Foreign bird-keeping is a most delightful pursuit, and need not be an expensive one. The necessary trouble and thought bestowed on the little captives is amply repaid for by the pleasure and interest they afford. I am going to describe my small aviary of Waxbills—a large class of tiny, lively birds, to be procured at mostly all bird shops and at little cost.

The Aviary Described.

This aviary is by no means perfect, and had I enough space, and if the expense were no object, I should have planned and placed it differently. Still, it is so far a success that the inmates when once safely over the fatigue and knocking-about of their journeys, thrive in the most satisfactory way; indeed, I may say after five years that I have hardly lost a bird, and their bright and happy demeanour and tightness of feather are a great pleasure to see.

The aviary is 12ft. long by 4ft. wide, and from 9ft. to 12ft. high, with a glass roof. It fills an angle of a greenhouse (outside), which forms its back and one side; the front facing south, is formed of ½in. netting painted with Brunswick black. The floor is netted, also covered with zinc, which is bent so as to form 4ft. of the front and one side; this keeps mice and rats at bay. I had intended the front to be open to the air, with glass shutters for use in cold weather, but I found, after the aviary was finished, that the corner was so draughty that I had to make the shutters permanent, only leaving the 4ft. by 8in. door to the west open, although even that is closed in stormy weather. A ventilator gives the necessary air.

Hot water pipes from the greenhouse pass through, and are turned on if the weather is very damp and cold, but even with this the temperature is generally about 47 or 48 degrees in cold weather, by sunrise. But the snug hay-lined cocoanut shells keep the small inhabitants warm and cosy. It is the long darkness more than the cold which makes our winters so trying to the birds, involving, as it necessarily does, long absence from food. Some system of artificial light for such tiny birds as Waxbills would, I am sure, be a great benefit, could it be safely arranged for.

Provisions for the Inmates.

I give the birds about a mealworm each for supper and breakfast during the dark weather, which I flatter myself helps to keep up their system. With the exception of the Green Amaduvades, this supply is greedily enjoyed by all the Waxbills.

There is a 4½ft. square cage, with a wooden roof and back, in the greenhouse, having a window opening into the aviary, where the seed dishes are and the mealworms are given, and there the birds are driven when any extra cleaning of the aviary takes place, such as the giving of fresh gravel or the syringing of the standard oranges, which live there. The oranges, by-the-bye, seem as happy and well as the birds, and are kept perfectly free from insects by the busy inmates. It is pretty to see them after a syringing hopping and flying from leaf to leaf sipping the drops. Of course, any other non-poisonous trees would give as much pleasure.

I keep pieces of fresh turf on the pots, equally agreeable to trees and birds. The hot-water pipes are covered with trays of sea-sand, which are easily taken out and changed, and there are one or two other shelves or trays at different heights with sand or grass seed, which latter the birds love to pick about in.

What the Birds Enjoy.

I give bunches of grass in seed, or flower, during the season, and chickweed, and always millet sprays, and a saucer of soft food—damped sponge cake, with a pinch of ants' eggs, and crumbs of Osborne biscuits and soft food mixture. This feed is especially enjoyed by the Lavender Finches and the Cordon Bleus. A basket of weeds from the garden (roots, earth and all) are thrown occasionally on the ground. This is evidently a great treat, and any non-poisonous plants with green fly on them that I can get I put in. These latter are instantly covered by the birds, and in an hour or so the plants may be removed without a green fly left on them.

Some Nesting Experiments.

I have never been fortunate with the nesting of my birds, but I continue to hope for better fortune. The eggs I have had, and I have got as far as the birds coming out of the shells, but that is all. Perhaps they disturb each other. At the time of writing I have a nest (in a cocoanut shell) of Zebra Waxbills, and another of Cordon Bleus, both containing eggs. The Cordons make a large and untidy nest in a branch of gorse which is put in to shade the birds from the glare of the sun on the glass.

I have never been able to try any of the more rare and expensive Waxbills, but anyone can have a very delightful, if small aviary from among the ordinary Waxbills. The tiny and common Avadavat is very handsome in its breeding plumage, but the whole race is delightful. I strongly recommend any one who thinks of going in for this fascinating hobby, in the first place to purchase and study good books on foreign bird-keeping, and in the second place to take in CAGE BIRDS, and never miss reading Mr. Page's answers to questions relating to foreign birds. If new beginners will do this, and follow the advice given, they will find their difficulties vanish, always providing they have a real love for and interest in birds, and that they never grudge the necessary trouble involved, and as far as possible do not hand over the care of their pets to any one else, unless that one be equally interested.

The Breeding of Winning Norwich Plainheads

By R. TAYLOR.

A lecture delivered before the Rochdale O.C. on March 9th.

When I was invited to give you a paper on the Norwich Plainhead, I was none too confident that I could add much to what you have already read scores of times in the Fancy Press, and knowing as I do that there are some older fanciers here who have been connected with the Fancy for a longer time than myself, my task is all the harder. My parents always taught me not to prate so much to older people than myself, so you will understand my feelings. However, my connection with the Fancy goes back to 1890, and I can tell you it was all uphill work. The Fancy journals helped us along, but this was as nothing compared with the advantages of the present-day. Anyway, I am here chiefly for the benefit of young fanciers, and should my paper appear a bit out of date to the old ones, I hope they will forgive me. It is original and I speak from practical experience only, knowing this is what you naturally expected when you invited me. My reading will be on a stock pair most likely to produce winners, the breeding and management of young birds after they leave the nests, and colour-feeding.

Big-headed Birds Wanted.

I will deal with the case of the cock bird first; my own experience is that the head is the most important thing, as without a good large head on your bird you will be nowhere. It must be round, lifting nicely up from the beak (which must be short), and the highest point must be the centre. I prefer it like a pin-cushion on the top and as round as I can get it. I also want it full at the cheeks, and it must not have that eye-sore of a gutter running from the eye to the back of the head. I must have the head to appear as round as possible without any breaks or gutters whatever, and having a fine bold eye; and then, and not until then, do I consider I have a good head for a Norwich stock cock.

As this is the hardest part to breed about a Norwich, take my tip and never introduce a small-headed bird into your room; if you do, it is quite possible you will never breed it out as long as you are a fancier. So beware.

When you have got these excellent points your bird is almost certain to have a good neck. Fanciers cannot keep this in mind too much. It is very rarely you see a nice large head on a thin neck. As regards the body, I want it broad in front and with plenty of width from shoulder to shoulder; it must be level on the back. The flights must be short and compact and then I don't care how large he is. I am not particular as to whether he looks a bit overdone in head and size so long as there is no coarseness.

A Suitable Mate for a Suitable Bird.

Now, as regards his mate, the hen: I like a medium-sized one. I don't mind one that looks a little on the small side, providing she is of the correct type and stands well across perch. If there is one thing more than another I like to see in the hen, it is the going about with the tail well up. Now, in my idea, this is most important. As this is the kind of hen that has produced my best show birds, my advice to you is, look to your hens for style, for without it you won't gain much success on the show tables. What is more pleasing to the eye than a bird hopping from perch to perch in the come-and-look-at-me sort of style? There is no doubt these are the sort of birds that catch the judge's eye.

Pairing to Produce Stock Birds.

Having got a pair of birds of this description, you should breed something out of the common. Some might say, how are we to get these big stock cocks? Well, you have to mate up for stock birds just the same as for show birds. I will therefore tell you how I do it.

I take the very largest cock bird I have in the room and pair him up to the largest hen; they must, however, be of the correct type, otherwise they won't be of much use as a pair likely to produce good stock birds. I want you to be very particular here, as this is the foundation for what is to come afterwards. The pairing of buff to buff, I am not a believer in. Some fanciers will say that you get larger birds this way; my own experience has been that you get more feather, so on that account I leave it alone. What we want is size in frame and not abundance of feathers.

Now, the pairing of yellow to yellow. I must confess, has produced for me some of my best show birds. My noted "Invincible" was off a buff hen from two yellows. My partner, Mr. Cleminson, bred "Lady Dainty" from two yellows, and I am mating this season one of my largest yellow cock birds to one of my large yellow hens, and I shall expect to breed some good stock birds off these; and I shall not be at all surprised if I breed a good show bird from them. You must not for a moment think that I am advocating double-yellow breeding as the best way to breed stock birds; I am simply telling you what has been the case in my own experience.

The Feeding and Treatment during Breeding.

Now we come to the breeding itself. I commence to prepare my birds at about Christmas time. I give egg food once a week for a few weeks, then twice a week until about the end of February. When March comes in I give it every other day, and at the end of the second full week in March I pair the birds up, and, of course, give it to them every day, and continue to do so until after the hens have finished laying. Then I only give it to them three times a week. When the birds have been sitting for twelve days, I keep them well supplied; I also put a pot inside the cage which I keep filled with hemp and groats (the latter, I think, helps to avoid little young ones). Having done this, you will have the hen well prepared for her task.

A Good Type of Stock Cock and a Stylish Hen.

From Sketches by Mr. Taylor, which were used to illustrate his lecture.

When I know the young are out, I supply the hen with a little green food. I prefer watercress to all other green food, as I think it induces a hen to come off the nest more than anything else. I know that some people don't give green food for two or three days after hatching takes place; I have not, however, seen any ill-effects from its use so early. Mind you, it must be fresh-cut every day. And I know from experience that if anything will get a hen to commence her duties it is a little green food. As the young get larger I let her have as much of it as she will eat four times a day; the same with egg food.

Concerning Egg Food.

It will be as well perhaps if I tell you how I mix my egg food. To one egg I add a good thick round of bread a couple of days old at the least. I put the egg through the mill first and then the bread. I don't rub it together or paste it round a basin with a spoon; it keeps better and the birds like it more if it is only mixed. Any of you who go to work early in the morning can make your egg food ready the night before; put the egg in one basin and the bread in another. You can do this with safety providing the food is kept cool. If you rub it together it will go sour.

Attending to the Young.

Now we will deal with the young about to leave the nest. Here you must be very careful not to touch them. Keep them in the nest as long as you can, and as soon as you see them out on the perches (don't wait until "to-night or "to-morrow"), put them in a nursery cage, or very likely the hen will take a fancy to some of their feathers for the next nest. Mind you, I am not speaking of youngsters that might have been frightened out of the nest before their time; in this case I should put the nest in the bottom of the cage.

My nursery cages are something like the Yorkshire show cage, only flat on top, and not so high. Nursery cages must be placed so that the parent birds can feed the young birds through the wires, but low enough to keep their tails out of reach of the old ones, or most likely out they will come. Place a little egg-food in the cage for them, and also let them have water on the outside.

Now, when shall we remove them away? There is so much difference betwixt one brood and another that I think this is a matter which is best left to those who look after them. One can't go far wrong if they are all eating and drinking. We come now to one of the most trying times in a bird's life, and now is the time you want to keep your eyes open. When I cage my young birds off I have a lot of ground Canary seed ready, and to two parts of egg and bread, I mix one part of ground seed; I find this a grand mixture, and have had very few sick birds that were fed on it. Should you have any go a little hit off colour, put them on bread soaked in hot milk. This is the grandest pick-me-up for both old and young birds that I know of; it very rarely fails. I get a round of bread or half-a-round—just what I want—put it in a shallow dish, hot some milk and pour it on until the bread is soaked through, and let it cool, when it is ready for use.

Instead of sand, I throw a few quaker oats on the bottom of the cage for them to pick amongst. The reason I don't give them sand when they are first caged off is because I believe they eat too much. I have found that young birds that have died suddenly have been simply "blocked up" with it; so on that account I don't let them have any until they have been caged off for about a week or so.

It is a very good plan at about this time to tie some hemp string above the perches for them to tug away at; it will do away with a lot of plucking. Also do not keep your perches too near together, or you will find the birds pulling one another's tail feathers out, if within reach. The best plan is to cage a good youngster by itself, as a good unflighted bird is many a time spoiled through having a second tail, which grows almost half an inch longer than the first one, and, competition being so keen now, one cannot afford to be handicapped with a second tail.

Is It Necessary to Colour-feed British Birds?

By CHARLES PRIOR.

A Lecture recently delivered before the Members of the City and Suburban F.C.B.

Mr. Prior, who was received with an ovation seldom surpassed, rose to thank the members and friends for this kindly welcome, a welcome which he supposed indicated their pleasure that he was there at last, after two previous attempts, ready to begin. He greatly feared, however, that there would shortly be a similar outbreak of applause, indicating their pleasure at his sitting down and leaving off. This lecture had been a veritable nightmare to him for some months past, every time he thought of it, and probably it would now be a nightmare for many months to some of his audience. Having by means of these and a few other jocular remarks put his listeners into a good humour, Mr. Prior proceeded with the lecture. The subject, he said, was the question, "Is it necessary to colour-feed British Birds?"

A Preliminary about Bogies.

This subject was so much in a nut shell that he would take the opportunity of making a few remarks upon quite a different matter altogether. This preliminary subject he would call "Bogies"—not exactly the sort of bogies that our nurses, or our elder sisters, or maiden aunts, used to raise to terrify our baby imaginations with in the nursery, but bogies just as fanciful, just as imaginary and unreal, as those of our childhood days. They were those of the Cage-bird Fancy, and the places of our nurses and aunts were mostly taken by those who had somehow or another missed the realization of every fancier's dream—the winning of honour and renown, such as it was, on the show bench. They were really novices in knowledge, whether they had been in the Fancy twenty years or only twenty minutes; further, they were the worst kind of novices, for they never sought knowledge with that open mind which was ready to learn. Therefore, he would no longer call them by the honourable title of novice; they were the malcontents, and as such they should be spoken of.

The "Incompetent Judge" Bogey.

These were some of the "bogies" they conjured up, said the lecturer: First, there was the "incompetent judge" bogey. We were all aware that judges were selected because of their possessing some special knowledge of the varieties they were expected to adjudicate upon, coupled with an ability to place them in their correct order of merit.

Very well; let us, then, take a walk round our shows in the company of our friend, "Malcontent." We arrive at the winning specimen in the first class we visit. "There!" says "Malcontent," "what do you think of that? He must have been a fool to have given that thing first." Then he trots out another of his bogies. "Don't you know what it is," he says, "it's the cage. He knows the cage. What I say is this—there ought to be a standard—all cages should be alike." We could see what it was, the lecturer proceeded; he (the "Malcontent") wanted to bring everybody else's method of staging down to his own level.

Up to now we had probably had eyes for nothing else but the bird, but having our attention directed so pointedly to the cage, we bestow a glance upon it. Surely enough, it bears the hall-mark of the painstaking exhibitor, every detail of it being thought out; it represented the last word in what a show cage should be. We smiled inwardly, and passed on to the next class. There we found the winner installed in quite a different sort of cage. "What about this, then?" we might ask of "Malcontent," "you can't say he knew his bird by his cage." "Oh, yes you can," says he. Then he would let loose more of his bogies. "He knows that first one by the perches. This one has got a wire to hold the prize card. That one over there is varnished outside instead of blacked. The other one has some brown stuff in the bottom," and so on.

It didn't seem to occur to him, however, that he was perfectly at liberty to copy in every detail the cage which was to catch the judge's eye. He didn't seem to think that the judge's verdict could hold water for a moment against the weight of his own opinion. But, after all, we ought not to be too severe with him. He was fearfully keen on winning, and desperately disappointed when he lost. So his case was far from hopeless, for that in itself was the stuff of which the best fanciers were made. But so far in his career he hadn't gone to work in the right way.

The first thing for him, for us all, to learn as to accept defeat as all true English sportsmen should—with fortitude. The next was to take the true lessons of defeat to heart, to use each reverse as a stepping stone to greater effort; to rectify each mistake as it was discovered, and so finally to triumph over every obstacle until the top was reached. And even then there was still a lesson to learn and that, seemingly, not by any means the easiest. The final lesson was to accept the role of the conquering hero with that modesty which became a true champion, even bettter than the wreath of laurels.

The Show Reporter's Bogies.

The lecturer then passed to another group of bogies, viz., those of the show reporter. A reporter, he said, like a judge should be possessed of a special knowledge of the birds he was expected to criticise. When a supposedly expert critic devoted nearly half a column of the Fancy paper to describing some specimen which he fancied was about the best of its species ever seen, but which was really but an ordinarily good specimen, and perhaps in the same report condemned a real champion for some such trifle as an occasional crossing of the wings, which no bird yet ever failed to do sometimes, then he was merely supplying amusement to those who knew better. But when, through lack of really expert knowledge, he characterised the Goldfinches and Bullfinches as being many of them obvious Foreigners, when he flung broadcast insinuations that many of the Chaffinches were passed by the judge as being "too good in the whites," when he said that certain Yellow Buntings were "too clear in their head markings," and such things as that, then, in his would-be smartness, that reporter was playing with fire.

Possibly he had been rubbing noses with our friend "Malcontent," or perhaps comparing notes with some more or less knowing novice of twenty minutes' (or twenty years') standing. In either case, he was committing a very grave indiscretion. We have grown accustomed to the illogical ravings of our noisy, although small, coterie of grumblers, and could appraise them at their true value. But when these vapourings were given weight to by being published in all good faith as the conclusions of an expert critic, then a "bogie" was raised, which could not be too quickly or too conclusively laid to rest. These things, however, were but "bogies" after all, and we should by no means lay our commonsense on one side so much as to allow them to frighten us.

A Warm Subject.

And now he would dismiss the "bogies," and begin on the subject matter of the lecture—the question, "Is it necessary to colour feed British birds?" He had said that he would dismiss the "Bogies," but here, at the very outset, he found himself stumbling against one of the most respectably old-established "bogies" he was acquainted with. It was true that the grumblers of some ten or twelve years ago invariably laid the foundation stone of their grumbles about the winner, by accusing him of being colour-fed. You see, of course, that they made a grievance of it. "Marvellous colour," they used to say. "Yes, marvellous colour. Wonder how many hundredweights of So-and-So's red-hot he's eaten? Wonder where he'd have been without it?" Likely enough they were wrong again, but even if they were right, they seemed unable to grasp the fact that it was always open to them to take a leaf from the victor's "book." No, they seemed to prefer to grumble. Well, let them see what advantage they might have gained if they had.

We were all aware, by this time, that there were the same two great distinctions of colour in British birds, as were so well established in Canaries, viz., Yellow and Buff; or it might be more correct to say Jonque and mealy. The better coloured ones amongst the buffs were not to be despised as show specimens, but colour was such an important thing that the birds very much to be preferred were the Jonques, and a Jonque bird of the right clearness of colour was an acquisition to be prized indeed. That was the point in colour—clearness and purity, as well as richness. He thought he could best illustrate it by comparing it with the beautiful clear complexions possessed by just a few of the people we came in contact with—chiefly ladies. This same clearness of colour was almost as rare in birds as in people. Canary breeders would understand what he meant; he believed they called it transparent brilliancy. Nature, however, did not usually lavish all her gifts upon one individual, and it would often be found that some specimens, which did not possess quite the fascinating purity of colour of the very select few, yet had a very fair share of the same, and some compensating excellence in size, shape, markings, etc. Such birds as these were by no means to be despised, for, after all, what was wanted was all-round excellence. There were also many specimens with no pretensions to excellence of colour at all ("washed out," "smoky," or "cloudy," were the terms applied to these); and no amount of excellence in other respects would enable these to get on even terms with those in the "transparent brilliancy" class.

A Perfectly Natural Aim.

It was perfectly natural for an exhibitor, upon becoming possessed of a moderately-coloured specimen, to wonder what he could do to improve its colour. And it appeared equally natural for the idea to turn to colour feeding. Well, he (the lecturer) had no hesitation in saying that, so far as the washy specimens were concerned, there was no system of feeding, or colour feeding, which would bring them anything like on a level with those who were naturally gifted with colour.

With regard to those who were moderately well coloured, the case required further examination. What they had to consider was that, in most of the British Finches, the colours should be well contrasted, as well as clear, rich, and brilliant. The use of colour food had a tendency to destroy these contrasts of colour. In the case of Linnets, for instance, assuming that the pepper took effect, the tendency would be to destroy the markings and to produce a sort of plain, self-coloured appearance. The same spoiling of contrasts would be apparent in Goldfinches and Bullfinches. Chaffinches should also in their feathering be well contrasted in colours; but colour feeding would tend to bring them one colour all over, and might even introduce a creamy appearance into the whites, which must be avoided. In the case of Yellow Buntings, Siskins and Greenfinches, there might be room for two opinions; but even there the effect would be to alter rather than improve.

The Solution of the Difficulty.

The solution of the difficulty lay in varied and generous feeding on natural foods, rather than the employment of pepper food. Generous feeding would be found to improve each colour uniformly without sacrificing brilliancy and contrasts. He was well aware that colour-fed specimens had won the highest honours possible—even including special prizes for best colour-fed birds. He would say, however, that these birds won, not because of their being colour-fed, but in spite of it. They were birds of great technical excellence, coupled with the highest class of natural colour, and could take their premier honours just as easily without the assistance of colour food, as with it. He had in his mind many instances of winners of premier honours which had never tasted colour food, although sometimes reported upon as "fed to perfection." He would just mention one case, that of a Yellow Bunting. (He selected a Yellow Bunting as colour feeding with this species was thought to be indispensable.) This Bunting was the property of Mr. Lloyd James, and was about the best representative of its species he ever remembered seeing. It was within his knowledge that colour food was not used upon this bird, and while he often beat colour-fed birds, he was never himself defeated.

He wished it to be understood, however, that he did not think that colour feeding had any injurious effect upon British birds, so no one need hesitate to experiment upon that ground. Years back it might have been the fact that colour-foods were adulterated with injurious ingredients, but nowadays there were respectable vendors of colour-foods of undoubted purity.

UNDER THE WHITE ROSE.

CITY OF BRADFORD O.S. has arranged a good series of lectures to take place during the next few weeks, the first being to-day (Saturday, the 27th), when Mr. James Hartley, of Bingley, will open a debate on "The Pairing of Yorkshires," truly a very interesting subject for this time of the year, and also a subject that "Jimmy" will no doubt handle well and make instructive to novice and professional alike. On April 10th they have booked Mr. W. A. Cowgill, on the "Norwich Canary"; so ye novices who have eyes on next season's novice medals, please attend. No doubt "Will" can give you points that will be of use to you. Last, but not least, the redoubtable Philip of Windhill will, on April 24th, lay down his strong ideas on the "Yorkshire Canary," and fanciers will do well to attend. Mr. Mason knows a "Yorkie" when he sees one, and is not afraid of saying what he thinks. All fanciers, intending fanciers, and friends will be cordially welcomed to these gatherings at the headquarters, The Flying Dutchman Inn, Leeds Road, Bradford.

BRADFORD EAST had one of their usual well-attended gatherings on Tuesday, the 16th, to hear Mr. R. Halliday on his pet subject, "Yorkshires." Mr. Halliday's remarks were upon the faults of Yorkshires seen in the show bench during the past season. The subject caused much more than the usual discussion, several fanciers taking a very prominent part; in fact, almost overwhelming were the questions asked, and no doubt the fanciers present reaped great benefit. To celebrate the success attained by two of their members in winning the Yorkshire Union Novice Medals during the past season, this society is to have a pie supper and social evening on April 6th, and a hearty invitation is extended to all.

THE BRADFORD WEST social evening on Saturday last was a brilliant success, about 100 members and friends with their wives and sweethearts atending. Good talent had been engaged, Mr. A. Pennington officiating at the piano in first-class style, whilst the "Moire" quartetto party rendered some fine glees, etc. Mr. H. Farquahar supplied the comic element, fairly bringing down the house. Mr. J. Townend makes a most efficient and affable chairman, and during the evening he presented the prizes to the successful competitors in last season's members' shows. Champion section: Mr. J. Clark, 1st; Mr. T. H. Inman, 2nd. Novices: First place to Mr. H. Graham; second, Mr. W. Helliwell.

SANDY LANE and District members turned up in full force on March 16th, to hear a lecture on "Yorkshires," by Mr. Samuel Dean, of Great Horton. After the lecture a number of questions were asked and answered, such well-known fanciers as Messrs. Bailey, Smith, Wilson, Watmough, etc., joining in the discussion. The use of Green blood as an aid to obtaining quality caused considerable discussion, all present being of opinion that it is by far the best means for obtaining that commodity.

BAILDON ORIGINAL C.B.F.A. held a smoking concert and prize distribution on Saturday evening last, which was very well attended, the room being packed. Mr. Head, one of their vice-presidents, occupied the chair. Although not a fancier himself he takes a considerable interest in the society. After a few songs, Mr. Head presented the two cups belonging to the society to the winners, and complimented them on their success. He also presented the runners-up with cash prizes, and urged them to further efforts for next season. Then he called upon Mr. Samuel Dean, of Great Horton, to deliver a lecture on "The Breeding and Rearing of Canaries," which was listened to with rapt attention by the fanciers present. After a few more songs, a number of questions on various subjects were put and satisfactorily answered. At the end a hearty vote of thanks was accorded the lecturer. Then came more songs. The comic element was splendid throughout the whole evening. A very enjoyable and interesting time was brought to a close at 11 p.m. It is hoped that before long a re-union of the two societies in this "village" will take place. With all working together a strong society of nearly 100 members could be formed. "Union is strength."

CANARY QUERIES.

Answered by CLAUDE ST. JOHN.

After the Wars.

"Lairage."—If the feathers have been out of the wings ever since the cat mauled it, two years ago, the probability is that the feathers were broken off close to the skin, and the stumps have not been cast off. If, on examining the bird carefully, you find this is so, you should very carefully extract the stumps one or two at a time, with an interval of a week between each operation, when the new flights would probably start to grow at once. Give the bird a tepid bath daily in which a little boracic acid has been dissolved, and if that does not soon cause the sore place to heal, add a few drops of extract of witch hazel to the bath for a time. When the bird has bathed and is quite dry, you may catch it and very sparingly anoint the hare place with fine ointment twice or three times a week.

Last But Not Least.

Robert Henry.—(1) You have doubtless been exposing the Yorkshire cock to draughts or extreme fluctuations. Keep it in a comfortable, but not necessarily overheated, place, quite free from draughts, and where the heat is regular, day and night. In addition to the staple diet frequently recommended here give a half-teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with two drops of sherry and one of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it three times a week. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whisky, ten of oxymel of squills, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together, two days in every three for a fortnight, or until bird is better. (2) As the pair of Norwich seem in good condition for mating, you may now put them together at any time. (3) This poser "floors me" entirely: "How much money will it take to start a cage bird association to hold a show every year?" Candidly, I do not know. It depends entirely upon the extent of your operations, the membership of the association, the amount of support you get from local hon. subscribers, the size of the show, extent of prize list, and—but is not that quite enough?

When Turk Meets Turk.

Bird Lover.—You certainly did wrong in separating the pair of birds you put together because they elected to have a scrimmage before settling down. Many birdy couples act in this way, particularly when both are in nice fresh condition, and the inexperienced owner is apt to believe that a vast amount of damage is being done; whereas, if they are left to settle the dispute, they generally settle down amicably in the course of a day, or even less, when it is found that absolutely no mischief has resulted from all the apparent strife. By all means mate them again in a fortnight or so, and if you hang the cock on the front of the breeder containing the hen until you see him feeding her through the wire, it may help to prevent a recurrence of heated arguments when they are put together. But, in any case, if they appear to quarrel again, just hang in a nest box a piece of cuttlefish, and a nest bag, and leave them alone. The probability is that matters will then soon be running smoothly. Yes, remove the first three eggs as laid, replace with a dummy, and finally see that the nest is well made, and return the eggs on the evening before the fourth egg is due.

Swollen Abdomen.

J. Y. H.—I do not think your bird could have been suffering with any serious inflammation, but it is impossible to say what the swelling may be without seeing it. It may be nothing more serious than constipation, and I advise you to try the following treatment for a fortnight or so, and note result. For staple diet give plain canary only, with half-a-teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake every second day as an extra, and twice each week a pinch of a mixture of equal part inga, linseed, and maw. Give no green food until better, and also withhold baths until quite well. Instead of water give the following decoction to drink two days in every three, and on each third day give plain water that has been boiled. Decoction: Add a small teaspoonful of linseed, and half-a-teaspoonful of honey to a teacup, fill three parts full of boiling water, stir well, cover over, and allow to stand until cold; then strain, and add to the drinker when filled with this decoction ten drops of syrup of rhubarb. After a fortnight of this treatment give four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day for a week, and then if you find the bird much improved, but the swelling not quite all gone, begin over again and repeat the three weeks' treatment, but this time omit the honey from the decoction and substitute a similar quantity of extract of dandelion.

Spring Cleaning.

St. Michael.—(1) It would be preferable in any case to temporarily remove birds whilst the house is limewashed and drying, as there is a great risk of their being exposed to draughts and getting chills during the process. You do not say whether the birds fly loose or are kept in cages. If the former, their removal is absolutely necessary; but otherwise the walls and ceiling may be quite safely limewashed without removing them, providing proper precautions are taken to prevent chills and draughts. (2) This again depends upon whether the birds are caged or not. If they are in cages, limewashing the walls will not hurt the birds' eyes at all. If flying loose, it is as well to be on the safe side, and avoid the use of fresh lime. Either well slaked lime, whiting, or any of the distempers on the market are good substitutes. (3) Put a tablespoonful of carbolic fluid in each gallon of preparation to make sure of more effectually destroying insect life. Some of the prepared sanitary distempers have an insecticide added in the manufacture. (4) Is answered in No. 1.

Does Not Sing.

A Young Beginner.—Your treatment is decidedly faulty, and you are doubtless correct in thinking it may be the cause of the bird's not singing for so long. Try following treatment for a few weeks. As a staple diet give plain Canary only, and give separately half a teaspoonful of summer rape three times a week, and on two other days a few grains only of hemp. Twice a week give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with three or four drops of sherry mixed in it, and a few grains of gold of pleasure seed sprinkled over it. Give these extras alternately, one each day. Every second day give a little fresh green food. Keep cage clean, free from red mites, well strewn with gritty sand, and in a comfortable place quite free from draughts and extreme changes. In the drinking water give ten drops of glycerine, six of dandelion juice, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence two days in every three for a week. In the second week give twenty drops of whiskey, ten of oxymel of squills, and two of oil of eucalyptus, well shaken together every second day, and on the alternate days two drops each of tincture of steel and tincture of gentian. If it is not quite well in that time, discontinue the medicine for a week, and then begin again, and repeat the two weeks' treatment in same order.

The Cause Apparent.

J.A.A.H.—As you seem to fully recognise the draught from the window as the cause of the second bird's condition, you will perhaps be able to see how either draughts at some time or other, or great variations in the day and night temperature, are responsible for the other bird's illness. Keep both birds in an equable temperature, not overheated, but as free from extremes as possible, and quite free from any suspicion of draught. Feed on plain Canary as a staple, and give half a teaspoonful of rape twice a week, a few grains of hemp on two other days, and three times a week half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of sherry and one drop of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it. In the drinking water give No. 1 bird ten drops of glycerine, six of dandelion juice, and as much Epsom salts, every second day for a week, as will cover a sixpence. In the following week give twenty drops of whiskey, six each of oxymel of squills and tincture of tolu, and as much chlorate of potash every second day as will cover a sixpence, and on the alternate days twenty drops of the following mixture, continuing this for a fortnight. Mixture: Get a pennyworth of citrate of iron and quinine from a chemist, and dissolve it in two tablespoonfuls of port wine. For No. 2 bird give twenty drops of the wine and iron mixture every second day for a fortnight. This should suffice for this bird if you remove the cause as advised.

Match-making.

Hopeful.—I do not think you could improve upon the pairs you suggest for attaining your object. Am afraid, however, you have rather too much marked blood in your small stock to breed a large percentage of clear birds. Still, you will certainly breed a few, and perhaps some very nice slightly variegated or ticked birds, which will make your object very near for you next season, when you should be able to breed a good number of clear birds with a nice, deep, rich, natural colour. To attain this, have at least fifty per cent. of your breeding pairs next season composed of one clear bird, and one ticked as lightly as possible, and another twenty-five per cent. composed of one clear with clear underflue, and the other clear on the surface but with more or less dark underflue. As regards the progeny from No. 4 pair, it depends solely upon whether the cock has any cinnamon blood in his veins or not. If he has not, then the young will probably be all green-marked, ticked, or variegated and clears, but no cinnamon-marked.

A Group of Five.

E.G.F.E.—(1) The colour of a "pink" eye varies a deal, probably with the proportion of pure cinnamon blood. In some pink-eyed birds the eye looks quite black when looking direct into its depths or in a poor light when the bird is adult, but even in such birds as these the pink colour is quite pronounced when the birds are callow young in the nest. The colour is also quite distinct when the eye is looked at obliquely in a good light. In other specimens the pink colour is easily recognised when looked at directly. (2) It may be possible to buy pink-eyed Sib hens at the price, but, in my opinion, it is not probable you will get anything sensational. Personally, I should not expect more of them than of the commonest of hens. A careful breeder who knows how his birds are bred also knows their value, and is not likely to dispose of Sib hens that are really good light mulers at practically the price of common ones. (3) No, it would not be any serious bar for a Sib-bred to show signs of being Crest-bred. (4) Limit diet to plain Canary, with half a teaspoonful of rape twice each week for a fortnight, and give a supply of green food four times a week. In the drinking water give twelve drops glycerine, and six each dandelion juice and syrup of rhubarb, two days in every three for a week. In the second week give two drops each of tincture of gentian and tincture of steel every second day. If she gets active and lively, she should be quite fit for breeding, but if she keeps apparently short of breath, you should not allow her to sit. Employ a foster to hatch and rear her young. (5) Unless you wanted to mate the cock with a second hen it would be best to leave him with the hen whilst sitting, if he does not interfere with her or drive her off the nest. In the latter event, of course, you must remove and keep him separate.

In a Bad Way.

D.S.E.—Your feeding is very faulty, and, in addition, the bird has almost certainly been subjected to some draughts or great variations of heat. Attend to these points. Keep bird in a fairly comfortable temperature, not necessarily overheated, nor yet chilly, and, above all, perfectly free from draughts. Feed on three parts Canary and one part summer rape mixed together, as a staple, and give separately a few grains of hemp twice a week, and three times a week a half teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of sherry and one of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it. Give a little green food four times a week. Do not give linseed nor anything save what is advised above. In the drinking water give six drops each dandelion juice and syrup of rhubarb, and as much Epsom salts for two days as will cover a sixpence. After this give twenty drops of whiskey, six each of syrup of squills, and tincture of tolu, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together, two days in every three for a week, and, if necessary, continue giving every second day for another week or fortnight.

A Little Anxiety.

Mrs. E. Cooper.—It is very probable the Roller, being cold-room fed, is adversely affected by the variations which must exist by having a fire in the room where it is kept only during the evenings. When the fire is burning move the bird well away from the heat of it, and if the room is at all chilly cover the cage over for the night with some light material, and see it is quite out of reach of draughts. In the mornings and during the day see it is not exposed to any draughts from windows or doors. Give the bath only on nice mild days. Instead of giving the bread and milk, give a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of port wine mixed in it twice a week only until better, and afterwards you may continue giving the sponge cake, but omit the wine. In the drinking water give, two days in every three for a week, twenty drops of whisky, ten of oxymel of squills, and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence. If the bird is not quite well in that time give the whisky and squills as above, and two drops of eucalyptus oil every second day for another week. Shake well together. The letters B.R.C.C. on ring mean British Roller Canary Club. The wearing of the ring is no advantage whatever in a private capacity, as it were.

A Trio.

T. H. W. B.—(1) Your bird may be a barren hen, and in that case her behaviour last year in building a nest and sitting in it would not be very unusual. It is not at all likely that a cock would have acted in the same way. It may be worth while trying her with a vigorous young cock this spring, and if she builds and commences to sit without laying, give her two or three common eggs from other pairs to hatch out, and she may rear these, or come in useful as a foster mother, as these barren hens will often make the best of feeders for the young of other pairs. (2) Taken altogether, I am inclined to give preference to the song of the Yorkshire in comparison with a Norwich. There is really very little to choose here, but upon the whole I consider the Norwich rather more of a ceiling lifter or ear-splitter than the Yorkshire. (3) There is practically nothing at all to choose between Norwich and Yorkshires as suitable breeds for the beginner, so far as ease of management and rearing are concerned.

Place for Breeding.

New Reader.—Certainly, I should say your incubator room would make a most suitable place for breeding Canaries in, if, as I assume, the chicks when hatched by the incubators are removed to another room, or, at least, disappear from the incubator-room. Of course, I am also assuming that the room is well lighted and a fairly bright one. The quietude due to the room only being visited morning and night would be all in favour of the birds doing well, though you would find it most advisable, if not really necessary, to pay a third visit at mid-day when young birds begin to arrive, to give the birds a fresh portion of egg food and green stuff. The morning and evening feed could both be attended to at the same time as the room was visited to attend to the incubators. The regular temperature which will arise from the working of the machines will enable you to mate up birds at any time now when they are ready; but see that the air in the room is kept pure and sweet, and not allowed to become stagnant and foul with the fumes from burning oil.

Use of Aviary.

T. A. Young.—The aviary you describe is, I fear, too small to be of much use for breeding birds in cages, as by the time you have set up cages and rack to accommodate about eight to a dozen pairs you would probably have very little space left to allow of any freedom of movement in getting about the necessary duties of attending to them. In these circumstances I should advise you to adopt the plan of letting the birds fly loose, and provide plenty of nesting places, and allow about three hens to each cock—say, ten or twelve hens and four cocks. This number would be amply sufficient for a breeding stock, and from fifty-five to sixty birds all told would be "a full house," so that if you succeeded well in raising young, and this number seemed likely to be exceeded, it would be advisable to remove the first broods about the middle of the season, so as to avoid overcrowding at the close. As regards the type of bird, it would be suitable, for that depends entirely upon the structure and its position and aspect. If protected from bad weather, sudden changes, well lighted, and free from damp, almost any breed should succeed in it; otherwise, an ordinary type of Roller, or Norwich, Borders, or Yorkshire would be most suitable.

Asthma or Not?

W. H. Stone.—You have made a great mistake in treating the bird so liberally for a supposed complaint, which you say you now find he never had at all. It would have been far better to have written at first and described the bird's symptoms. If not now too late to be of any use, try the following treatment for a week or two. Staple diet, plain canary only, with a half-teaspoonful of summer rape twice a week. Every second day for a fortnight give half-a-teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with two drops of sherry and one of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it. Give a little green food, dandelion, chickweed, or lettuce on each alternate day. In the drinking water give twenty drops whisky, six of daudelion juice, and ten of syrup of rhubarb every second day for a week. After the first week give two drops each of tincture of steel and tincture of gentian every second day for a week. Limit the diet to what is mentioned above; give no egg food, and see the cage is perfectly clean and free from mite, and not exposed to draughts or great variations of heat. The one that is troubled with red mite should have a few baths with a few quassia chips soaked in the water, and then be changed into a perfectly clean cage, the place where the infected cage has hung being thoroughly cleaned before the clean cage is hung in position. The probability is that all your cages require a thorough overhaul, as you will often see advised here, and the sooner they get one the better for your success in the coming season.

Brevities.

Birds and Plants (Nurse E. Wilkie).—As a rule, a greenhouse is by no means an ideal place for keeping birds, but in such a position as yours, and being unheated, I am inclined to think you would find the combination work very tolerably, providing you do not allow it to get overheated by the sun in summer, and keep it thoroughly well ventilated at top by means of top lights, which can be raised to any required height to keep air cool at top, and allow superfluous moisture to pass off. Try the experiment first with a hardy breed, such as common Germans, Borders, or Norwich, and allow plenty of space for exercise.

Caught Cold (Onward).—Keep bird in a comfortable temperature, free from draughts. Give half-a-teaspoonful of summer rape every second day, in addition to the staple diet of plain canary. Discontinue the bread and milk entirely, and give instead on days when you are not giving rape as an extra, half-a-teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry well mixed in it. After giving this one week, drop the number of times you give it to twice a week, and omit the sherry, and in place of the decrease give a pinch of hemp twice a week. In the drinking water give, two days in every three until better, twenty drops whisky, ten glycerine, two eucalyptus oil, and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence, well shaken together.

Loose in Bowels ("Light").—Feed on plain canary only as a staple, and every second day give half-a-teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and on the alternate days a few grains only of hemp. Limit diet strictly to this for a fortnight, save that you may give a small piece of banana three times a week; but do not give green food or any other substitute. In drinking water give daily for 3 days, and every second day for the remainder of the week, ten drops of glycerine, six of dandelion juice, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence. On the alternate days after the first three days are past give four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid. During the second week give two drops each of tincture of gentian and tincture of steel every second day, and if the looseness is not stopped after the first day or two of the second week, give twenty drops of whisky and two of tincture of opium on the alternating days for once or twice, as may appear necessary. Don't apologise for writing; am always pleased to help.

Pair of Queries (C. R.).—(1) No, you certainly must not take away the usual seeds when your birds have young to hatch. Allow an unlimited supply of canary all along, and gradually add the additional rape and hemp as you may see frequently advised here, or in "Canary Breeding for Beginners," when the young are a few days old, and the usual supply of green food and egg food is, of course all in addition to, and in no sense a substitute for, the regular seed diet. (2) This pair was not ready for mating when put together. You can only wait patiently now until the hen freshens up with the approaching spring, and settles down to business more practically. Feed as you would a pair you were preparing for mating, but instead of giving egg food give a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with a pinch of inga and gold of pleasure mixed in it on alternate days. Also give two small leaves of dandelion daily.

Strange Antics (J. D.).—It is probable the cage or the place where the bird is kept is chiefly responsible for its curious habit of throwing its head back in "taking its perches." Is it kept in an all-wire open-top cage, or has it been lately removed from a much smaller cage? Either of these things might explain its habit. Anyway, as it is evidently in good condition, there is no reason why you should not mate him up in a week or so if ready, and in the meantime give him a pinch of Epsom salts in his water three times in one week.

What Are Crest-Breds? (Ruhtra).—If you mate a Crest with a Norwich Plainhead the young will not be pure Crest-breds, but simply cross-bred: Plainhead Crest. Although the Crest-bred proper has not a crest, it is so intimately blended with Crest blood that it has practically the same blood as the bird adorned with the best Crests, and one of its parents has been a Crested bird for several generations backwards, with probably a couple of Crests occasionally for one parentage. The Crest-bred is a decidedly larger and more massive bird than a Plainhead, and has considerably longer and more profuse plumage.

Breeding Sibs (Lucky).—If your birds are not the produce of birds which have already been inbred, there is no serious objection to mating them together this year with a view to starting a strain of Sibs for light Mule breeding, seeing that they are strong and healthy, and fully matured. Next year you should try Finches with the young hens bred from the cross, and any that throw Mules showing any light in the plumage should be mated back to the male parent, and a dark-eyed clear yellow cock introduced to mate with the old hen, and, perhaps, one of the young pink-eyed hens, for change of blood, as you should not repeat the mating of brother and sister next year, neither with the old birds nor any of the young.

Trimming For Breeding ("Trimming").—It is quite unnecessary to trim Rollers for breeding in any way whatever. It is only the very long and heavily feathered breeds, such as Crests or Lancashires, that require any preparation of this kind.

Would Not Sit (Beginner).—Give her another trial, and be careful not to interfere with her nesting arrangements more than is absolutely necessary. Many hens are upset, or ruined, by too much fussy meddling. By the way, did you remove the eggs as laid, and fail to put a dummy in the nest whilst the clutch was being laid? I have known this to be alone responsible for a hen's refusing to sit. You can do nothing to make her sit. The only way out of the difficulty is to transfer the eggs to another hen just commencing to sit.

A Songless Roller (Anxious).—First see the bird is quite free from chills and draughts, and great variations in temperature. Then feed and treat as advised to "A Young Beginner." Give also the same medicines, except that during the second week you should substitute this mixture for the eucalyptus one, viz., get a pennyworth of citrate of iron and quinine, dissolve it in two tablespoonfuls of port wine, and give twenty drops of this every second day for a fortnight, or until the moulting is stopped. Of course, you will give the steel and gentian on the alternate days as advised to the querist referred to, though it should not be necessary to continue them longer than a fortnight.

Pants and Throbs (Elm).—Feed for a fortnight on a staple of plain Canary only, with just a pinch of summer rape twice a week, and half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake on two other days each week as the only additions. A little green food—chickweed, groundsel, or dandelion—may be given three or four times a week. In the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and six drops of syrup of rhubarb two days in every three for a week; and in the following week two drops each of tincture of steel and tincture of gentian every second day. If it is not quite well by that time, repeat the two weeks' treatment in same order.

Diet in Outdoor Aviary (J.T.O.).—As a stock diet give an unlimited supply of Canary and summer rape, which you will find most economical to provide in separate vessels. In another vessel you may give a mixture of two parts hemp and millet, and a half part short oats, winter rape, and inga, adding another one part each linseed and maw when the moulting season arrives. Give this as a stock diet regularly, with a supply of green food, and when there are any young in the nests add a pan of soft food of any kind you favour, and during the most prolific part of the season, when young are abundant, give also a pan of hemp, about enough to last the birds from breakfast time to tea time.

Canary Querists should send to our publisher for "Canary Breeding for Beginners," 7d.; "House's Canary Manual," 1/2; and "Yorkshire Canaries," 1/-, post free.

An Unnatural Mother (Mrs. Deries).—Am sorry I cannot give you any remedy to prevent your hen dropping her eggs from the perch and pecking holes in them. It is a vicious habit which is quite incurable, although there are some who believe that giving them an egg-shell surreptitiously filled with some nauseous substance to break, or giving them a china nest egg to work off energy upon, will cure them of the habit. Personally, I have no confidence in such plans, but you may try them if you care to do so. If your nests are properly made and lined, the only certain remedy for such a habit is to cover the floor of the cage with some soft material to prevent eggs being broken by the fall, and then putting them under a foster parent to batch and rear.

Something in Throat (Bert).—See reply to "A Young Beginner," and feed as there advised, and also carry out same suggestions respecting general treatment. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whiskey, ten each of glycerine, and oxymel of squills, and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence, two days in every three for a week, and if it is not quite right by that time, continue same mixture, excepting the potash, which you may omit, and add two drops of eucalyptus oil instead, and shake well together, every second day for another week.

Effects of Seeds (Cymro).—It is rather too big a subject to go into details concerning the good and bad effects of all seeds in this column. The subject has been fully dealt with several times in other sections of the paper, and once as recently as last summer in our "Novices' Notebook." However, we will see what can be done at an early date. Meantime, briefly, Canary and rape may be regarded as the bread and cheese of Canarydom; hemp and linseed may be compared in effect with suet pudding; niger has been called, and perhaps not inaptly, the birdy eau de vie; maw, beyond being a general favourite to entice birds to eat otherwise not very acceptable soft food, is most useful during the first half of the moult to help the birds to get rid of the plumage.

A Great Improvement (Novice, F.H.).—Am glad to hear there is such an improvement in your birds' condition. You should be able to dispense with all special treatment now. Leave off all extras on the bill of fare gradually, and omit all medicines for a week. If the birds show any signs of going back give them the same treatment again for a few days, then omit it for a few days, and then break it off gradually. You may take advantage of any spell of nice mild weather now to transfer the birds from the kitchen to the other room. Thanks for kind remarks about "Canary Breeding for Beginners." Glad you find it so useful.

A Broody Male (Crossbred).—Assuming you are not really mistaken about the sex of your bird, it is certainly a little unusual for the cock to completely take charge of the hatching business. You do not say whether the hen sits on the nest as well as the cock, but if she does, and both birds agree amicably, you should let matters take their course. It would be a mistake to separate them, as the chances are that the hen might refuse to sit when the cock was removed, and there will probably be no harm in both birds sharing the shackles of matrimony. After all, it may only be that the cock sits on the side of the nest to make believe he is sharing the business.

Repeated (T.H.W.B.).—Sorry your last queries could not be replied to last week. You will find the omission rectified in this issue, which, I think, will fully reply to all in your repeated letter.

Sitting Hen Sneezing (W. Smith).—As your bird is so near hatching, I do not advise you to attempt any drug treatment at all beyond giving a few drops of glycerine in the water. Try what a few grains of hemp and a pinch of maw added to the diet will do, and see that the bird as she sits on the nest is not exposed to any cold current of air from anywhere—such as a window, or in the opening and shutting of doors. It sometimes happens that a hen which appears to be wheezy and breathless whilst sitting comes round all right as soon as the young are hatched—possibly through excitement, or, maybe, the apparent wheeziness is nothing more serious than nervousness. This may be the case with yours.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Concerning a Song Thrush.

T. Brown.—It is a bad time of the year (too near the breeding season) for Thrushes to be caught with any expectation of their becoming steady. Keep the cage of the bird hanging breast high in a room where people are constantly about, and partially cover the cage front for a time. When you go near throw a few mealworms in; try to gain the confidence of the bird; later, try to get it to take the mealworms from your fingers. You must have great patience, and trust to this and time to get the bird tame. I have dealt with the feeding—twice within the last five weeks. What a pity readers do not look up recent back numbers. Here you are again, briefly: Feed the bird on the following lines (any good corn dealer would mix you the stock food). Stock mixture (store it in tins): Finely ground Chicken (or Game or Pheasant or Partridge) meal, six parts; ground silkworm pupæ, meat meal, good ants' eggs and dried flies, one part each, by measure. Get the Chicken (or other) meal without grit If you have any difficulty in doing so, finely crushed puppy cakes (or puppy meal) makes an excellent substitute; or the "broken" biscuit obtainable from the grocer. If the latter be used, add an extra part of meat meal and silkworm pupæ. Damp quantity required for daily use with grated raw carrot, or finely-chopped lettuce, chickweed, watercress, or other green food in season, or cold boiled potato. Vary them frequently, and add a teaspoonful of preserved egg flake, or half a hard-boiled egg, finely minced up, occasionally. Give some mealworms daily, and any other insects you can lay hands on, also ripe fruit and berries frequently, and according to season.

Mate for Cock Roller.

X.Y.Z.—You can use a cock Roller Canary for Hybrid breeding, certainly, if you do not mind the likelihood of any young being small in size. You seem unaware of the fact, however, that hen British Finches are not to be relied upon to sit their eggs and feed their young (if any hatch) when in a cage. I have known odd cases where the hen has been successful—both Bullie, Goldie, Redpoll, Linnet, and Greenfinch hens—but they are, unhappily, rare. Most fanciers rely upon Canary "fostermothers" to hatch and rear their young Hybrids. If the hen Finch will do her part, the cock Canary can practically always be relied upon to help. You must read the many replies I have given during the last month on Hybrid pairs and Hybrid breeding generally, and adopt the feeding methods, etc., given therein. Cages are dealt with in a reply given this week. You could choose, with prospect of success, either a Bullfinch, Greenfinch, Siskin, Goldfinch, Redpoll, or Linnet hen, but she must be steady and domesticated (not fresh caught).

In a Cote.

Mule Breeding.—If you want to use several hens, then you should turn in Canary hens only. You will be well advised not to turn in more than four, with a cock Goldfinch, Linnet, and Bullfinch (the latter, by the way, is a doubtful breeder). The place is rather ill-shaped, being too high in proportion to the length and width. It is only like a large flight cage. Both light and ventilation ought to be all right if the front is wired (½in. mesh) from the top to within two feet of the bottom. As the place has very little depth front to back, you may find it necessary to rig up a waterproof cover (or blind) to keep out heavy storms. I presume you have a means of entering the cote when necessary; by hanging a sheet over the opening one can easily get in and out with but little chance of releasing a bird. I should think the birds would be better flying loose than caged up; they would stand the cold weather better that way, and you would have very little cage space. Canaries (when co'droom bred) often stand the cold with less apparent discomfort than British Finches—the latter often show its effects very quickly. Sanitary distemper will be found much better than whitewash for use inside the place.

In an Aviary.

E.T.—Pleased to hear you have taken the "bird fever"— hope it will prove a lasting complaint. Your aviary is a nice size, but a depth of 4ft. instead of 3ft. would have been a decided improvement. You should be careful to have the sexes equal when keeping both cock and hen of the same species; it is a mistake, for instance, to have two cock Bullfinches and only one hen, as it leads to fighting as a rule. The others will probably agree all right; any persistently quarrelsome and aggressive individuals should be removed. Hawfinches are not among the satisfactory aviary birds. They are not quarrelsome, but painfully shy—hide in any corners or dash wildly about when anyone approaches. A very tame bird (say, hand-reared) would be the best to try. Sand (coarse and gritty) is much better than sawdust; anyway, the birds must have grit. The feeding of the Hawfinch is dealt with in another reply this week.

On Hybrid Breeding.

Hybrid.—In my recent answers you will no doubt have gleaned some information concerning Hybrid breeding, what nests to use, and foods, etc. You should also study the articles appearing in our columns and read the "Annual." If you are pestered by both cats and small boys, then you must certainly choose the workshop in preference to the yard. I like an indoor place, personally, and prefer each couple to have a roomy cage to themselves (see another reply this week). I don't think British birds would take to the style of nestbox you illustrate; it is more suitable for certain species of foreign birds. Hang up wicker travelling (Roller) cages, with the inside fitments removed and the bars taken out at one end, screened with dried grass or even hay. The stack of cages you illustrate is excellent—would answer admirably. The workshop is all right, too, and would make a grand "flight" in the winter. Caged pairs are much better than couples flying loose indiscriminately, however, so far as breeding results go. By the way, your pairing is very unusual and ambitious. For instance, if you rear any Hybrids from your Chaffinch-Greenfinch, Bullfinch-Bramblefinch, and Yellowhammer-Greenfinch couples, they will be the first on record. Don't, of course, be discouraged from trying.

A Pair of Redpolls.

Irene. It is quite possible to breed with a pair of Redpolls in a good-sized breeding cage. Simply turn the couple in and leave them to "go as they please." When the warm weather comes the hen will be pretty certain to desire to "keep house." Keep a few sprigs of nesting material about, and the hen will commence to fuss about with them when she feels fit. Then hang in a nest-box, or nest-pan, or the prepared wicker travelling (Roller) cage adopted by many fanciers. One of my own successful couples, to my great surprise, chose a white earthenware nest-pan, and built the nest entirely of white charpic—not a particle of anything else. It is astonishing what strange things some British hens take to when nesting in captivity. The nest of this couple was a huge affair, projecting upwards a long way from the rim of the nest-pan—it reminded me of a Yorkshire pudding which had risen well. The hen could hardly be seen when sitting, so deep was the cavity. But she made this uncommon nursery a huge success. Both birds fed the young, and chiefly on ripe seeding shepherd's purse and chickweed, with the tiny "creeping things" to be found amongst it. They ate the ordinary seeds, and I saw them at the dishes of insectivorous food and egg-food. Before breeding operations commence, Redpolls should be fed the same as Linnets. Stock seed mixture: Canary, three pints, teazle two pints, summer rape, charlock, and linseed one pint each. A feed of hemp, maw and niger, and a good wild seed mixture can be given frequently (varied) by way of a change. Let them have a little green food, especially rape seedlings, in the winter, and ripe seeding shepherd's purse, chickweed, plantain and groundsel freely in the summer. To help forward into breeding condition tender young dandelion leaves, and the flowering and seeding heads are indispensable. Also put in the "side-pan" or "tit-bit" drawer, daily, a teaspoonful of the following mixture: Two ounces each of gold of pleasure, niger, sesame, and thistle, one ounce each of mustard (golden yellow seed), dandelion, plantain, maw, cornflower and lettuce. It is the finest "tit-bit" or "refresher" (call it what you will) that I know, and there is no waste. This treatment will bring any bird into breeding condition at the earliest possible moment.

A Quartette.

Stag.—(1) I don't think you ought to have removed the cock Finches out of sight of the hen Canaries which they had been running with. It does not hurt to part them (say, with a wired slide) for a week or two until both sides are ready to begin in earnest; (2) It will not make the slightest difference providing the couples are properly mated—that is, the hens agree with their partners. When a pair has arrived at a proper understanding, the presence of other birds in the same room will not "put them off"; (3) If you took the bird out of a warm kitchen into a cold bedroom, then this would be the cause of the trouble. Nothing is more certain to throw birds out of condition than sudden changes of temperature; it is highly dangerous to suddenly shift a bird which has been housed in a warm room into a cold room, or vice-versa; (4) We have published illustrations in Cage Birds of plantain, chickweed, shepherd's purse, etc. Shall be pleased to tell you whether you have gathered the right weeds if you send a sprig or two of them.

Stock Cage, &c., for Linnets.

Viking.—1: The cage I use myself (and most well-known fanciers of my acquaintance) is that which has now come to be widely known as the "Finch Stock Cage." It is made and stocked by all up-to-date cage-makers; you could get one from most of those advertising in our columns. My own are 16 and 18 inches long, by 11 high and 8 and 9 wide. The front bottom rail is made very deep (not less than 3½ inches) and a hole is cut in this, through which the seed-drawer runs, to the back of the cage. 2: The perches are two in number, and they rest on the bottom rail. In position, one should be on the wire next the water-hole, and the other about 3 inches from the seed-drawer. This gives a jump of about nine inches in the smallest size of cage. 3: You will have noted that two is the correct number. In shape they should be square underneath, rounded at the top—one rounded to a half-circle, the other only the corners taken off. One perch should be a full three-eighths wide, and the other a full half-inch; thickness, about three-eighths of an inch. Variety in the size and shape of the perches prevents slipped claws, stiff claws, and other similar troubles. 4: As a colour for the insides of stock cages, a very pale blue cannot be beaten; a very pale green, however, is just as suitable.

British Bird Querists should purchase our "British Bird Manual," published in two parts, "Hardbills" and "Softbills," price 1/- each, or in cloth cover together, 2/3 post free.

Another Quartette.

Midlothian.—1: There is no recognised type, and no recognised size, for the breeding cage of Finches. When muling, some fanciers pin their faith to single breeders (one compartment), others to double-breeders (two compartments, with a sliding division between them), and others to three compartment breeders. Personally, I use the double-breeder, 40 inches long, 16 high and 11 wide. Some so-called breeding cages, especially the low-priced ones—are ridiculously small, and if used only conduce to failure. Another type of muling cage has lately sprung into fashion—one with a large compartment for the hen and a smaller at the side for the Finch, when necessary to shut him off. For use with two British birds, then I like a cage very deep from back to front, and as large as possible—not less than 30 inches long by 16 high by 16 wide. Get a catalogue or two of cages from one or other of the leading makers (see advertisement columns), and you will find the patterns I have mentioned illustrated therein. They should be severely plain, but as well made as possible. 2: With regard to perches for Canaries and small Finches, note reply to question 3 given "Viking" this week. 3: It is very doubtful, indeed, whether any of the birds you mention will breed in a cage. The hen Goldie would probably accept a cock Linnet or Redpoll or Siskin for a husband. 4: I don't recommend millet for the reason that British Finches exhibit no liking for it.

A Snow Bunting.

J. Young.—The three great show points in a Snow Bunting are size, steadiness, and purity of the white parts of the plumage. They vary a good deal in size, and as a rule only an extremely large bird stands a chance in keen competition—a bird with a wide, bold head, and very wide, rounded chest. The white plumage should be as snowy as possible, and whatever brown it may have across the chest and elsewhere be of a warm, rich tone, while the markings on the wings and tail should be distinct, and a dense, glossy black. Your present diet is very good. All the Buntings feed very much alike. The only "stock mixture" you will need is plain Canary seed. Few Buntings will eat any quantity of other seeds, though small oats, wild seed mixture, rape, cracked hemp, coarse oatmeal, maw, and one or two other seeds will be picked over and a few eaten, while some get to like crushed sunflower and safflower. To make a little variety in the diet, it is best to give a feed of soaked ants' eggs frequently, and live insect food (mealworms, flies, scoured gentles, small beetles, and grubs generally), according to season. Fresh (live) ants' eggs are relished exceedingly. "Shop" ants' eggs (get the best quality only) are well liked if soaked in a little new milk, drained on a cloth, and then given the birds; this helps to bring them into song and condition. It is well to mix a sprinkling of a good insectivorous food among the ants' eggs, gradually increasing the quantity, as in this way Buntings (other species, too) can be got to eat it readily; and it is very good for them. Green food these birds are not keen on, but you can always offer them a sprig of whatever you may happen to have in the place. Corn Buntings will usually eat a little "seeding green-food" (grasses, shepherd's purse, etc.), and Reed Buntings, too.

Management of Hawfinch.

Beak.—It is not possible, within the limits of my space, to give full details of the management of any bird. You should peruse some up-to-date book on the subject, say, Mr. Norman's "British Bird Manual" (price, 1s. 1d. from Cage Birds office), which deals with the Hawfinch. The best house cage is the "Finch stock cage," described in another reply this week, but not less than 20 inches long by 14 inches high by 10 inches wide, and the two perches should be ¼in. and ⅜in. respectively. The water-hole should, naturally, be a very large one. As regards the proper feeding, the principal food for a caged Hawfinch is sound, plump, white sunflower seed, or mixed sunflower and safflower. Sunflower seed which is black, or striped, however, is not bad, by any means; still, I prefer white myself whenever obtainable. Given this, and a mealworm or two every day or so, the bird asks for little more. The mealworms are a great help in keeping (and getting) a bird steady. The bird also appreciates hemp, linseed, canary, oats, small wheat, and sometimes a little buckwheat, summer rape, small Indian corn, etc. His powerful beak makes short work of beechmast, suitable nuts (walnuts, etc.), plum and cherry stones, hawthorn, privet, etc., berries and the like. They appreciate a little young lettuce, watercress, chickweed, shepherd's purse, also ripe apple, pear, etc., occasionally. They make no exception in favour of tender green garden peas, of which they are passionately fond, and these are especially good given in the pod. They are fond of a bath, so let him have one whenever the weather is suitable; daily, if possible. The free use of water is the finest possible thing to keep him in good condition.

Brevities.

Hen Goldfinch-Canary Mule (R. J. P.).—It is extremely unlikely that your hen Mule would produce any young. Many hold that Mules will not breed at all. Have never personally known of a case, but I consider it is now established that in odd instances Mules have successfully bred. If you want to try the experiment, then pair your hen to either a cock Canary or Goldfinch.

A Goldfinch (R. S. G.).—The bird seems to be in a very sorry plight, with which its age may very likely have something to do. I really don't see that you can hope to get it right again; in fact, the probability is that it will drag on, getting worse and worse, until death releases it. You might try dressing the places lightly twice daily with sulphur ointment. If no improvement in a fortnight or so, then, personally, I should have the bird chloroformed.

A Matter of Capacity (F. M. Y.).—The three pairs will not be too many, providing you see that each couple gets "acquainted" before being turned into the flight (they should all go in at the same time). Provide plenty of nesting sites, and see that no two hens engage in a struggle for the same nest-box or nesting-place.

Sex of a Mule (F. Yardley).—I should be inclined to write the bird down as a hen. Healthy young cock Linnet Mules "record" stoutly when still in their nest-feathers; and they commence to sing out directly the moult is well over. Hens will certainly tootle a bit, but give a very desultory and jerky performance, not at all like the loud, sustained song of the cocks. The hen is a dull, greyish brown; the cock a warm nutty brown, with distinct traces of yellow about the throat, cheeks and breast. Your feeding is good. Try the bird in a room by itself for a week or so.

Not Singing (H. T.).—Removing the Thrush from the aviary would come as a shock, certainly; but it will sing again this spring, I have no doubt, providing the "sneezing," etc., disappear. Try the following for 10 or 12 days: crush a chlorate of potash lozenge and dissolve half in a little hot water, then stir in half a teaspoonful of honey, then make up to two tablespoonfuls with cold water, and give it to the bird to drink. Prepare afresh daily. For hints on food, note reply to "J. Brown" this week.

A Skylark (Novice, A. M.).—Sometimes the fault lies with the cage, many being much too small. I have found a mixture of dry sand (bird sand) and road dust (equal parts) answer admirably as a floor covering, put on very thickly. Have also used coarse sawdust and peat-moss litter (very finely ground) with success. A duplicate "false bottom" should be obtained, made of thin zinc, and run in frequently filled with chickweed, or even with grass, made very wet. This helps splendidly to keep the feet in condition.

With Cock Chaffinches (F. W. Stubbs).—Your cage is not over big for one couple only, and I very much question whether two cock Chaffinches will agree together; they can be frightfully pugnacious. So far as I know the first Chaffinch-Canary Mule has yet to be bred; one or two reputed examples have been exhibited, but have always been doubted. You cannot do better than try the cross. The hen Canary would require to be treated on the same lines as though she were breeding with a cock Canary.

A Sex Problem (W. Garthwaite).—I should think the Thrush must be a hen, seeing the time it has been caged and the fine condition it is in. I advise you, however, to keep it a month longer; by then we are sure to get some sunny weather. If you could fix the bird up in a room which gets the sun, and in which it would not be disturbed, that should soon induce it to sing, if a male.

Another Sex Problem (W. D.).—I certainly think that both the Redpolls are cocks. The fact of one "bossing" the other, which is very afraid of the aggressor, points to this being the case. Your Bullfinch, which will not eat green food and turns berries out of its cage, is a kind of double-strength freak. I have never seen his like. Have you tried him with ripe seeding shepherd's purse and chickweed and ripe blackberries? Bullies' "song" is very peculiar, and might well be likened to a sort of "chuckling."

A Trio (C. F.).—(1) I should think that 10 to 12 pairs would be the limit. You should see that the inner shed is fairly well lighted; (2) ½in. mesh wire netting is the best, taken all round, for a collection including Finches, though ¾in. mesh is small enough for many species. I should think 2in. mesh would be right for pigeons; (3) I don't know of any book which deals with British birds in aviaries on the lines you mention. There is not one, I am sure. Most books deal with both cages and aviaries.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

What Mynah, etc.

M. L.—Am of opinion your bird is the Common Mynah (Acridotheres tristis), which ranges over the whole of India, Burma, and Tenasserim. These birds are practically omnivorous and can have any of the following soft foods (see advert. columns): table scraps, ripe fruit, mealworms, and any other insects you can capture, and about twice a week a little minced cooked meat. Of course, the cage of a bird indulging in such a diet and a large eater at that, needs frequent attention, and it should be sufficiently large to allow the bird to take exercise. The Pekin Robin should have a diet of soft food, ripe fruit, and several mealworms, and any beetles, spiders, smooth caterpillars, etc., you can capture for it; and most individuals appreciate a little white millet seed, say, a teaspoonful twice a week.

Amazon Parrot Retching.

A. K. G.—It is the after-effect of the milk-sop that is giving the trouble, and it will be some little time before the effects of this are received. You could just dip its piece of biscuit or crust of household bread in the chemical food water, merely to moisten, not to saturate it. Continue the magnesia water every third day, so long as there are no signs of diarrhœa. Be liberal with the ripe fruit (apple is good), nuts and plain biscuit, but do not on any account be tempted to give slops, table scraps or animal food. A clean piece of cuttlefish should be continually hanging in the cage, and a little grit might with advantage be mingled with the seed mixture. Do not leave the water continually in the cage, but let the bird have a good drink three or four times daily.

Cockatoo Sick and Unwell.

H. S. V.—Very probably there yet clings to the cage wires some dressing, which occasioned the sickness. Get a small dish mop and some boiling water, into which put a handful of washing soda, and thoroughly wash every part of the wirework; finally well swill with cold water, and then leave it exposed to the atmosphere for a few days—of course, where it will be protected from wet. The cage should then be quite safe to use. All Parrots climb about the wirework of cage, and also bite and suck same, and there is no means of preventing this; but you should have no further trouble if you treat cage as above. If, however, there are little lumps of metal about the wire, I should remove these, so as to obviate any chance of the bird biting them off and swallowing them.

Cardinal with Abnormal Thirst.

R. J. P.—Supply drinking water in a small glass drinker, holding about one ounce, and well colour this with Parrish's Chemical Food; do not leave it in the bird's cage continually, but let is have a good drink, say, three times a day, and a bath only once a day. Dict: A seed mixture of canary, millet, oats, hemp, and sunflower seeds, the two latter kinds in only half the quantities of the three former. Also supply ripe fruit (apple or banana they usually favour) and a few insects, say, three or four mealworms daily, a little later small beetles, spiders, and smooth caterpillars will be procurable, and will be very beneficial. If it will take it, a teaspoonful of some good, soft food mixture (see advertisement columns) will also be very wholesome, or a few ants' eggs, as bought, scattered over sand.

Finches for a Greenhouse.

B. H. S. N.—Our Mr. Weston has already answered you re the British birds. I may add that I consider Chaffinches and Greenfinches dangerous company for a mixed series, such as you suggest. The greenhouse will answer for them very well indeed, but it will be best to get a good stove for very severe nights. I also strongly advise the glass to be covered over with roofing felt as far down as the ventilator. I really advise you to divide it up into about four enclosures, with a passage between from door to door. If you care to send me a stamped-addressed envelope per the Editor, I will send you a rough ground plan of such divisions as I suggest, which you will find far better than cages and much more economical in the long run, besides being more likely to give better breeding results. If you send for plan, send dimensions over again, also width of doors. It does not do to overcrowd for breeding; twelve to fifteen pairs would be ample. Avadavats, Waxbills, Bronze Wings, Zebras, Gouldian, Ruficauda, Ribbon, and other Finches, etc., would all agree well together.

Parrot Not Talking.

A. W.—I cannot suggest any reason, as you give no clue as to the nature of its illness or treatment, and even if you received advice through this paper, I have no recollection of the details. It would appear as if it had not entirely recovered yet from the illness you mention, but you can safely conclude that, unless the illness has permanently affected the vocal organs, with complete recovery it will in due course become spirited and talkative. Possibly if you give me full details as to its illness, treatment, and its present demeanour, I could suggest something to help. In the meantime, put four drops of pure glycerine into its daily supply of drinking water, say, one ounce. You give me no clue as to how you are feeding the bird, but slops, table scraps, and animal food must not be given; the diet should be confined to seed mixture, ripe fruit, nuts, plain biscuit, and a little of such green food as it will take, lettuce, salads, etc. Cuttlefish, grit, and water should be continually in the cage. The bird should get plenty of fresh air, yet must not be subjected to draught.

A Sick Parrot.

J. S.—It is a case of indigestion, for which I think the boiled maize and coffee sop are responsible. Give two or three doses of Dinneford's Magnesia (one teaspoonful to each ounce of drinking water), but stop this at once at the least sign of diarrhœa. I should advise you to wean it from the boiled maize as soon as possible, but you must not stop it suddenly. An adult Grey Parrot is better on a diet of seed, fruit, nuts, plain biscuits, and a stale crust of household bread. Stop the toast and coffee at once. The toast will do no harm, but simply dip it in water, just to damp it, not saturate it. I do not think you have cause for anxiety if you get the bird on to the above diet as soon as possible; if after two or three days the sickness continues or the bird becomes weak, repeat query with full details. The bird should have the opportunity of satisfying its thirst at least twice a day, and if it appears to need a stimulant, let it have a few sips of very weak brandy and water.

Amazon Breathing Heavily.

A. C.—I am assuming that you are feeding the bird in accordance with my previous reply. On receipt of this, take away drinking water overnight, and first thing next morning give one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in one tablespoonful of water, and give nothing else to drink till that has been consumed; follow this by giving the ipecacuanha, oxymel of squills, and glycerine mixture; also the chemical food in accordance with previous directions. Also bathe the nostrils (use a camel-hair brush) with diluted glyco-thymoline. Supply liberally such ripe fruit as the bird will eat. Do not neglect to keep a piece of clean cuttlefish in its cage. Supply a little boiled maize every other day. Prepare this as follows:—Boil till soft, drain off all surplus water, dust with flowers of sulphur, stir up, but not so as to crush the grains of corn, and supply to the birds. Note: The boiled maize only keeps fresh one day, and the food vessel must be kept strictly clean. I must repeat former warning: do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food. Keep the bird carefully out of draught, but not in a vitiated atmosphere. If the breathing should not improve in a week or ten days, repeat query, with full details of treatment, etc.

Brevities.

Is It a Cockatoo? (New Reader)—Yes, it is the Long or Slender-billed Cockatoo (Licmetis nasicus). The majority of those imported to this country do not talk much, most of them not at all. I have never met with a talker, but have heard of one or two. Keep it where it will hear plenty of conversation, also teach it by constant repetition.

Grey Parrot Improving (M. Aikman).—Am glad to note the improvement being maintained, and you cannot do better than continue on the lines of previous replies. I am of opinion the improvement will be continued to a complete recovery; if, however, there should be any relapse, write at once giving the fullest details. The fruit will be very beneficial and the little potato a good change, providing there is no fat of any kind on it.

The Sex of Violet-Neck Lories.—A friend who at present possesses a true pair of this species, writes me that the distinctions are but slight. The male is slightly the slimmer and is more active-looking; his head is more rounded, his beak is smaller and more rounded from side to side, that of the female being more angular. The purple head-mark of the male is rather more intense in colour than that of the female. I should add that the above distinctions would only apply to fully adult birds.

Grey Parrot Not Talking ("Grey Parrot").—The healthy Grey that does not at any rate speak a few words I have never met, and I should most certainly not readily part with a healthy, well-plumaged specimen. Keep it where it will hear plenty of conversation. Your living room should be a good place. Also teach it by constant repetition. As it becomes tamer there will be more probability of its talking. I should certainly advise keeping it another six months at least. Healthy Greys are none to easily got hold of, save at high prices.

Foreign Bird Querists will find in our handbook, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1, and "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," 6d. post free; a mine of information of use and interest.

Aviary For Budgerigars (Peggie).—You do not give me your county, but Budgerigars are hardy birds, and make ready use of husks, etc., so that they should thrive and increase in your aviary. I think, however, better than forming a sleeping shelter inside, it would be far better to glaze in, outside the netting, half the front of roofed-in portion; as the front is 6ft. high, the lower 2ft. could be matchboarding and the remaining portion glass. Fix up a dozen or more husks under the roof and against the wall, and put in plenty of natural branches for the birds to disport themselves about on. Do not overstock at first; make a start with, say, four pairs, each pair from a different source, and only buy the best—that is, large, well-coloured and well-feathered birds; refuse all birds said to be in moult.

Ring-Neck with Small Birds (Donabate).—While I do not think the Ring-Neck would do any harm to your Budgerigars or Cardinals, yet I cannot assume the responsibility of advising you to put it in, as there is certainly a great risk in doing so. Why not keep it in the cage? But don't feed it on table scraps, please. You can safely put the Red-Crested Cardinals in with the Budgies and Javas. Your aviary appears to be well arranged, and I certainly advise you not to put the Ring-Neck in. Why not try the Black-Cheeked Lovebirds? These should be worth breeding.

What Bird? ("A Novice").—I fear I cannot give you the exact species, as many of the genus Serinus, to which your bird evidently belongs, have their marking pretty generally as you describe, varying only by having a greater or less amount of yellow and a different placing of the various colour areas of their plumage. I take your bird to be either a Green Singing Finch or a St. Helena Seedeater, both of which, I believe, have crossed with the Canary; at least, I have recently seen a stuffed specimen of the last-named cross, which had been bred, and which lived for two years in an English aviary. Put it up at once in a large double-breeder, take out all partitions, and leave birds to themselves; don't give up hope this season till well into autumn.

Treatment for Yellow-Wing Sugar Bird ("Northumbrian").—I prefer milk sop made so: take sufficient milk in a small pannikin, add sufficient sugar and crushed plain biscuit, and boil whole up together, supplying to bird when cool. Test the bird with all kinds of ripe fruit as in season, till you find what it favours. I should also give a little soft food mixture, say, equal parts sponge cake, ants' eggs, and dried flies, made just crumbly moist; also give it one or two mealworms daily; sweetened stewed fruit is also good for them as a change. Keep the bird out of draught, but not in a vitiated atmosphere. They are very ready to suck out all the juice of grapes, and with evident appreciation. Milk sop is a good mainstay, but they want variety.

Value of Gouldian Finches (L. D. P.).—The normal value of Gouldians is as follows: Red-heads, 25s. pair; Black-heads, 17s. 6d. pair; Yellow-heads, extremely rare, very few have been seen, and consequently very costly on the rare occasions one comes to hand. At the present time Gouldians are very scarce on the market, and are worth about double the prices named above, and I question if you will get any, save by advertising for them, and I am doubtful about your getting Red-heads even by this means. There are few, indeed, in the country at present.

PROPOSED NEW SOCIETY FOR BRANDON COLLIERY AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—There is to be a meeting held on Wednesday, March 31st, at Mr. G. Reed's, 35, Newcastle-street, Brandon Colliery, at 7.30 o'clock, with the object of forming a Cage Bird Society. All fanciers wishing to join please attend.

THE PREPARATION OF BIRDS FOR EXHIBITION.

SIR,—Being somewhat of a novice in the Fancy, although I have had the pleasure of winning a 1st or two with birds I have bred, and being an aspirant for show bench honours, I feel curious as to the preparing of birds for show. I have sought eagerly for the "secret" of getting rid of those "few loose feathers" and putting on that "gloss" which one sees on birds belonging to professionals. Are these indeed "secrets" which are only known to the favoured few? How often do we hear of a bird winning "hands down" after it has become the property of a pro? I should esteem it a favour if you would give this letter publicity, and should it promote controversy, I am sure I am not the only novice who would welcome the knowledge we should gain in your valuable columns.

PROPOSED NORTHERN YORKSHIRE CANARY CLUB.

SIR,—In reply to your correspondent, Mr. J. Park, seeing that the want of a Yorkshire Canary Club for Cumberland and North Lancashire is at present being felt in Millom and district, may I ask Mr. Park how it is that the Yorkshire fanciers he refers to have not joined the Cumberland Y.C.C., which was formed four years ago? They must be aware of its existence, as I (as the secretary) received a letter from the Millom secretary previous to their show on January 1st last, in which they gave their classification (and a very good one, too), and asked for our support. I admit the Society has not been very much in evidence during the last twelve months but what is the cause? Want of members. And yet there are plenty of Yorkshire fanciers in the county to make a good, strong club, if all would join. I think every fancier of the variety, whether he keeps only one pair or twenty pairs, ought to join together, for the benefit of the variety, of themselves individually, and last, but not least, of the various Societies in the district. If one good fancier in each town would take it upon himself to get every fancier he knows of to join together, it would be the most effective way of furthering the interests of the "straight 'un" in the district.

HOW I KEEP MY FOREIGN BIRDS IN HEALTH AND CONDITION.

SIR,—Of all hobbies Foreign bird-keeping is, I think, the most fascinating. I started some years ago with a delightful Grey Parrot. I fed it most carefully on freshly-boiled maize (it would eat nothing else in the way of seed), fruit and a little green food, and sheltered it from draught and cold, and brought it safely through the winter. But in the spring it went the way of so many Grey Parrots, much to our sorrow. Since then I have had several of these birds, but it seems an impossibility to get one to live. I have kept Indian Ringnecks, Rose-breasted and Amazon Parrots, and by feeding them on maize, corn, hemp, Canary seed, plain biscuits and fruit I have always had them in splendid health and feather. But birds in cages, however healthy and interesting, are never seen to such advantage as when flying with comparative freedom; and last year, in the early spring, I began to east longing eyes on a warm south wall we have in our garden, and at last, after much planning and thought, induced the "head of the house" to have a lean-to aviary built for me. It is 27ft. long, 16ft. high, and 6ft. wide; it could with advantage have been 2ft. wider, but we did not wish to take up more ground. It is divided into two parts: 8ft. is given up to Finches and Waxbills, and the remainder to the Parrakeets. The roof is half boarded over, and covered with felt tarred and firmly nailed down. At one end is the shelter shed for the Parrakeets; it is match-boarded 4ft. up, and then glazed to the roof, which makes it nice and light for the birds, and they readily use it for their sleeping quarters. At the other end, and for the Finches, is a smaller shelter shed which is made in the same way, and fitted up with rush nests and husks for the birds to sleep and bring up their young in. The Finches' aviary is divided from the other with ½in. wire netting, and the whole of the aviary is covered with the same. The floor is half grass and half gravel, which latter is raked over daily and renewed frequently. For perches I have dead branches of apple trees and twigs fixed in the sheds, and in the flight I have an apple tree planted with the largest branches thinned out. This I find a great source of pleasure to the Parrakeets, which spend hours whittleing the dead wood. The seed pans are placed on small one-legged tables, as I find the mice cannot run up these; the one leg, of course, is put firmly in the ground. They have a large shallow pan for the drinking water and for bathing purposes, and it is washed out every day. In the Finch portion of my aviary I have Waxbills, Grey Javas, Saffrons, Black-headed Mannikins, and one pair of Zebra Finches, which have had since May 12 young ones. During the summer I am able to find plenty of ants' eggs, and these I gather up (earth and live ants as well) and put in the Finch house, and I think this is what makes my birds look so well. I give them besides white and spray millet, Canary, rape, and hemp, and plenty of the seeding grass from the garden paths. In the Parrakeet portion of the aviary I have pairs of Cockatiels, Rosellas, Java Parrakeets, which the dealers call "Moustache Parrakeets," and six pairs of Budgerigars; the last-mentioned have 16 young ones, ad are very tame, often taking spray millet from my hand and perching on my shoulder or head. Besides millet and Canary seeds I feed them on oats, white sunflower, oranges, or any ripe fruit, and seeding grass, groundsel, and lettuce. I have just put in the aviary a sheaf each of oats and wheat, and this they enjoy immensely. I look forward with great eagerness every week to receive CAGE BIRDS, and it is to this that I owe all my success. And those who read Mr. W. T. Page's answers to correspondents will soon learn from his valuable advice, how to keep their birds in health and beauty. Now that I have obtained some experience, I mean next year to try my luck with Tanagers and other softbills.

THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD CLUB.

SIR,—Allow me to draw the special attention of Norwich fanciers to the fact that the Norwich Plainhead Club has withdrawn from the Cage Bird Union, and the committee would be pleased if those fanciers who withdrew when the club joined the Union would now rejoin us. I should also be pleased to hear from any other fanciers desirous of joining, and will give them any particulars they may require. Mr. Raynes having resigned from the secretaryship of the club, and I having been elected to the post, all communications in future should be addressed to me at 126, Bury New Road, Bolton, Lancashire.

JNO. HOPKINS, Hon. Sec.

THE CAGE BIRD UNION.

SIR,—I notice in your report of the election of officers for the Norwich Plainhead Club, it is stated that 17 voted in favour of continuing to be affiliated to the C.B.U., but it is not stated how many voted against. I do not know how many voting papers were sent in, but at least 44 were, so that unless a great number did not vote, I presume the club will not be affiliated this year. I should be glad to see the publication of the correct balance-sheet of the C.B.U., as the balance-sheet submitted at the general meeting (as stated by the late Secretary), was only a rough balance-sheet, and would require bringing up to date. When the value of the typewriter is placed on the credit side, the year's working will probably show a profit instead of a loss.

ROBT. HALL.

(Our report gives 15 as voting in favour of affiliation to the C.B.U., and the number voting against should have been given as 29.—EDITOR.)

SENDING BIRDS ON JOURNEYS.

SIR,—The letter by "Constant Reader" will open the eyes of some people who send off their birds nicely packed. To receive a bird in one of these narrow boxes is enough to break the keenest beginner down, and is much to be deplored. Now I have never received any in these narrow boxes, but I have fared worse. The other week I wrote about a bird, and got a very satisfactory answer. I sent off the money (I fancy I can hear readers calling me "fool"; but remember I am dealing with a first-class man, and paying a good price), and received a letter, thanking me for the favour, and saying "bird will leave Euston to-night at midnight, Thursday." I went to the station on Friday, fully expecting the bird to be there; but, no. Waited for the next train, no bird. Came home, and went again at dinner-time; then again at tea-time; then again at night. But no bird. You will see I was keen on having it. Went again on Saturday morning; no bird. Again at dinner-time, again in the afternoon, and the station is three miles from my home! So I did a bit of walking. But not a feather. On coming home I telegraphed about it, as I thought it might have gone astray. But no answer. At nine o'clock on Saturday night a little lad came to tell me the bird was at the station. I had got a severe cold through sweating and walking in the cold, and was in bed with influenza. But I got up and fetched the bird. The seller had never sent a word about it, although I sent a stamped addressed envelope. However, on Monday he sent me a post-card, which he had dated the 13th (Saturday), but the post mark distinctly says 15th. He had sent it two days after the bird!

JOHN CANNING.

CINNAMON BORDER FANCIES AND THEIR COLOUR.

SIR,—I was pleased to see such an old fancier's letter as Mr. Dixon's on the above in last week's issue. I must thank him for the information he gives, re the early Hawick shows. He has omitted to say if the classes he refers to were for Greens and Cinnamons. I presume they were, and that in the year 1894 (the year of the two classes) there would be one for yellow and one for buff. Mr. Dixon says he was 3rd with a self-cinnamon cock in the year 1893, and that in his (Mr. Dixon's) opinion this bird was a better colour than those he has seen exhibited this year. I must apologise to Mr. Dixon for having said that in those days the Cinnamons were all hens, as it seems Mr. Dixon had that one cock he showed at Hawick. But, then, in those days colour-feed was allowed, and I take it that most Borders at that time were colour-fed. Will Mr. Dixon tell me straight if this bird he refers to was moulted out a natural colour? What I mean by that is, did he give any colour food in any shape or form, either the colour-food as is sold now, or cayenne, or marigolds, or any other condiments that would tend to enrich the colour of the said bird? Also will he state if he knew of any other parties having self-cinnamon cocks at that time coming anything near to the Club's standard, and if there were any other Cinnamon Borders shown by other exhibitors at the above shows, and give me an idea haw many there might be? I would also ask Mr. Dixon if he visited any of the undermentioned shows last season, and looked carefully at the Cinnamon Borders that were shown, viz., Newtown St. Boswell's, City of Glasgow, Glasgow and West of Scotland, Hamilton, Scottish National, and last, but by no means the least, the Crystal Palace? There was a fair good turnout of Cinnamon Borders at each of the aboove shows, and one had a fine chance of comparing them. I may say that I visited four of the above shows myself, and I heard some rather broad hints thrown out that some of the Cinnamon Borders had partaken of the forbidden fruit. Ono bird in particular was left cardless at one of these shows. I asked the judge why it was out, and he said he doubted its colour—he believed it was colour-fed. Surely Mr. Dixon didn't see those particular birds whose colour has been doubted? I am afraid not. Mr. Dixon says that "Your Reporter" has given plain facts. Well, I fail to see it, as I have visited all the largest shows in Scotland these last ten years or so, and I am speaking from what I have seen and heard. I think I am quite safe in saying I only saw three Self Cinnamon Border cocks shown in the first seven years. In fact, there were always more Greens than Cinnamons shown; say, in a class of 10 to 15 there would be perhaps two or three Cinnamons, and in many cases only a solitary one. If the Cinnamon Borders are of such old standing as Mr. Dixon would have us believe how is it we did not see them on the show bench? Is it likely the breeders would always show the Greens, and keep the Cinnamons at home? I fail to see the use of breeding birds to keep them at home for no end or purpose, as in any articles I have read on mixing the Cinnamon with the Green it was always advised to put it in on the hen's side. So what would have been the use of Cinnamon cocks (unless for the purpose of breeding Cinnamons)? The cinnamon colour always being on the hen's side, I fail to see where you would get Cinnamon cocks. And if you did they most certainly would not be the rich chocolate shade aimed at nowadays. I fail to see yet that the Cinnamon Border of to-day is lacking in colour to any of the other types of Cinnaman Canaries if they were also moulted out a natural colour. I see Mr. Dixon states that in the catalogue of the 1898 Hawick Show it gives the number of entries as four, yet there were seven tickets awarded—surely a mistake!

CINNAMON BORDER.

(Mr. Dixon's figures are rather indistinct, but we believe 14, and not 4, should be the number of entries in 1898.—EDITOR.)

Dear Sir,

Are you going to be behind-hand this season? All practical and leading Fanciers are giving our "Egg and Biscuit" a thorough trial this season, as they recognise its merits and superiority over home made egg food. This is not like other foods, a substitute, with which you have so often been deceived, but the genuine article, and the analysis is sufficient proof of the high concentration and nutrition. The nutriment of an egg is diminished by boiling, and the albumen is in a coagulated and indigestible form, but the egg in our "Egg and Biscuit" is perfectly soluble and easily digested in the crop.

It does not cost much to try, and it will be the means of introducing to your notice something you have long been waiting for. Send for a 6d. or 1/- tin at once, post paid 7½d. and 1/3. Do not forget that our "Egg and Biscuit" contains 50% of actual egg, and refuse substitutes offered you by Corn Merchants which naturally show a larger margin of profit than the genuine article could do.

Yours faithfully,

FOX BROS. & CO.

A NOTED LINNET.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. R. D. Parlett's letter in your last issue, I would just say that it is his ignorance of the English language which made him write as he did in the first part of his letter. As regards the concluding paragraph of his letter, I can assure him his first letter caused me no "grief and trouble," my sole object in writing being to contradict a statement and not to correct one.

F. A. WATT.

WHAT IS THE RECORD?

SIR,—I claim to hold the record for Goldie Mule breeding, and that I established two years ago, on February 23rd. I put a Goldfinch and a hen Canary together on January 1st and had four young Mules by the 23rd February, all of which I reared till they were feathered. Then I lost one of them. I now have a cock Canary and a hen Bullfinch together, the Canary being also run with a hen Canary. I had young ones off the Canary. The Bullie has laid six eggs. She laid her first on March 1st. I have put the eggs under a Canary which has never laid an egg; still, she is sitting well on these Bullie's eggs. I bought the Bullie in the market for a shilling. It was caught last November, so I hope, sir, I shall be lucky enough to break the record with regard to Hybrid breeding.

LEICESTER CAGE BIRD SOCIETY'S OPEN SHOW.

SIR,—In your issue of March 13th, I was very much pleased to read a letter from our old friend, Mr. H. J. Chick, respecting the open show to be held by the above Society on December 4th and 6th. It is quite true we have had some grand shows in the past, and fanciers have supported us well with entries. Still, oven shows of this kind cannot always be made to pay, but we have always paid out prize money in full within seven days. I would like to stato here that this was not the main reason for not continuing this show (as Mr. Chick seems to think). The difficulty we havo had has been to find a room suitable to hold it in, and keep up the high standard of the exhibitions we have held in the past, those rooms we have hitherto had not being available. However, we have now secured a room known as the old Free Library, a really ideal placo for a show, lofty and well lighted, nicely heated, and quite free from draught. I may say also that we have engaged specialist judges, and hope to have the support of all fanciers as it is our intention to make this show one of tho finest that has ever been held in the midlands.

W. STEVENS.
Chairman, Leicester C.B.S.

MIDLAND COUNTIES Y.C.C.

SIR,—A very enthusiastic meeting was held on the 18th inst., a report of which I am sending separately. I feel confident the club will be a big success, judging from the numerous offers of assistance I am receiving, and I sincerely trust (now that a radius has been fixed) that all Midland fanciers, both champions and novices, will rally round us. Fanciers will see by the report that I had the honour to be elected bon. secretary and treasurer, but, unfortunately, unforeseen circumstances connected with my business have arisen since the meeting which compel mo to at once relinquish the post. Luckily, with the kind assistance of our chairman, I have been able to find a very capable substitute (who was at very short notice kind enough to help me out of the difficulty) in Mr. W. H. Uzzell, 76, Drayton Road, King's Heath, near Birmingham, who (providing members have no objection) will in future receive and answer all correspondence. The club may still rely upon my active assistance and support, I am glad to say.

THE YORKSHIRE CANARY CLUB OF IRELAND SPECIALS.

SIR,—I shall be pleased if you will allow me a small space in valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, with reference to the above matter. I was an exhibitor, at the show held on November 26 and 27, and won 1st and special in the Lark class. I got 8s. prize money, less 2s., but no special. I inquired about it of the secretary, and he told me that he heard I had been paid. I wonder if any other non-member was treated the same? I see hy the Dublin daily papers that they had a good year, and a balance in hand.

WILL THE WORCESTER AND DIST. C.B.S. CEASE TO EXIST?

SIR,—I write to inform you that I have resigned the secretaryship of the Worcester and District C.B.S. I have sent each member a copy of the balance-sheet for the year 1908, showing a balance of £1 12s. 7d. on the year's working, which I have disposed of by vote, as I could not get members to attend meetings. I have not heard of anyone being appointed in my place. I take it there will be no Worcester and District C.B.S. after this date.

A. E. BISHOP.

THE EARLY BIRDS.

SIR,—I noticed in CAGE BIRDS an account of early birds, so I thought I also would like to tell you about my luck. I have not seen yet whether there are any who have bred birds as early as myself. I had some hatched on December 28th, 1908. There were four of them altogether, but one fell out of the nest when a fortnight old, and one died. The other two are fine birds. They have just finished moulting, and the cock is shaping for whistling in grand style. The next nest of young I had were hatched on January 22nd, 1909. The hen had four young, and are all doing well. The same hen has had two nests, and the latter were hatched on March 14th, 1909, and there are five, all of which are doing well. I should like to know if anyone has had young ones earlier than the first nest mentioned? I am only a novice, and I am very pleased to let you know this. At the same time, I wish all who deal with birds, and all who read your good paper, CAGE BIRDS, every success.

J. FAIRBROTHER.

TYPE OF PRESENT-DAY WINNING NORWICH PLAINHEADS.

SIR,—I have followed with interest the correspondence which has recently appeared in your columns on this subject, and trust the outcome will eventually prove a step forward in the efforts being made to keep the "chubby bird" to "type and quality" instead of "size and colour," which appears to be the predominating feature. There is one thing which I think has had a good deal to do with the latter point of recent years, and one which has been overlooked, i.e., that judges have not had sufficient time at their disposal when officiating. For instance, in the majority of cases one judge takes the whole show, and the classes invariably average 12, 16, and upwards, and in some cases 20 per class. The time stated to commence is 9 a.m., but it is generally half-past before a commencement is made. The doors open as near 12.30 o'clock as possible, and the judge has to make it a point to have done by this time, in order that a satisfactory attendance may be obtained. What is the result? The first two or three classes (generally Yorkshires) are judged carefully and given proper time; then the judge looks at his watch and finds the time is getting on, and that he also must get on. Naturally, the following classes (Norwich) are got through as quickly as possible, and in many cases are just scanned over. The one which catches the judge's eye at first sight is put in the cards, whereas, if each bird had been given a proper chance, matters would no doubt be different. Is it not a fact that many good birds require "working up" in order to show themselves properly? Which further confirms my statement. These few remarks are not made as casting any reflection on our judges, but they only prove that if more time were at the disposal of judges when officiating, each bird would have a fair chance. Furthermore, it would give the judge an opportunity of studying the various points minutely. Thus, instead of the big coarse feathered specimens winning, we should have those cobby ones, carrying the right quality of feather, and above all clean cut away behind. These are the kind which every true lover of Norwich should endeavour to breed —regular Berties and a la Floyd.

SHOWS AT LLANELLY.

SIR,—With regard to last week's "Twittering" announcing the date and judge of the Llanelly and County Fanciers' Association Show, I should like you to remind the readers and fanciers who have given their patronage to the Llanelly and District C.B. Society, that the same is a mixed society, with poultry and pigeons, and also that their cage bird section is confined to a radius of seven miles.

PRIZE MONEY AT THE WELSH NATIONAL SHOW.

SIR,—Having read recently several letters in your valuable paper concerning prize money at various shows, I thought I would let the Fancy know the treatment I have received from the above society. I might say that my exhibits were a British Goldfinch and dark Greenfinch-Canary Mule, which stood 1st and 3rd in their respective classes. Having read the schedule carefully, which stated all prize money guaranteed and paid within ten days, I got a little uneasy when about three weeks had elapsed, and having heard nothing, I dropped the Secretary, Mr. R. J. Truscott, a few lines, stating I had not received my prize money, 16s., thinking it might be an oversight. In reply I received a letter, dated January 4th, 1909, but bearing the post date January 20th, 1909, which read: "Dear Sir,—I have much pleasure in handing you 16s., in payment of your prize money won at our recent show. I much regret to say that, although it was the finest show ever held in Wales, it was very far from a financial success, and if you feel disposed to give a small donation it will be thankfully accepted.—W. Truscott, Treas." Another type-written letter came with the prize cards, and said that, "owing to a very heavy deficit, we shall not be able to send out all prize money for a few weeks, and must ask your consideration. We are getting up a drawing for help to meet the deficit." In reply to this I wrote Mr. W. A. Truscott: "Yours dated January 4th came duly to hand yesterday (rather a long time on journey), and in it you say you have much pleasure in handing me 16s. prize money won at your recent show. I much regret to say there was no enclosure of prize money, so shall be pleased to receive same at your earliest convenience." In reply I received post-card dated January 28th, 1909, stating: "Yours to hand, and I hope to send you cheque next week. I trust this will do.—W. A. Truscott, Treas." But up to the present time I have not received my money. I might also state that I won a special prize of two framed plates for best Goldfinch in the show, and have not received them. Is it any wonder so many shows are failures, when fanciers get treated in this fashion? I should think it is a matter that the Cage Bird Union ought to investigate, seeing that such prominent exhibitors have the management of the society. My expenses were 7s. I should like to know if there is any other fancier who has not received his prize money, or am I the only selected one?

THE MANCHESTER AND N.C.O. SOCIETY'S ANNUAL SHOW.

SIR,—The Committee of the Manchester and N.C.O.S. have decided to hold the next annual show at the Zoological Gardens, Belle Vue, and the committee think that this change should be the means of making the show a much greater success than ever. A very much larger room has been retained, which will be suitably heated, and will accommodate any number of visitors, without the crowding we have formerly had to contend with. The usual number of free tickets will be given to our exhibitors making over a certain number of entries, which will admit to the Gardens, with the thousand and one attractions, which are so well known all over the country, thrown in. The show being held in the firework season, this should prove an extra inducement to visit the fixture. Admission to the Gardens is 6d., but bookings are made from some 200 stations direct to the Gardens for an additional 4d., including admission, and the proprietors will make arrangements for special excursions from any station not already having cheap bookings. We have retained already Messrs. Roe, Battye, Houlton, Garner, Godley and Hadwin as judges, and altogether are looking forward to making the Manchester Show this year a record one in every respect.

THE LIVERPOOL ANNUAL AMALGAMATED SHOW.

SIR,—Under the above heading there have appeared recently in your columns several letters asking for an explanation as to why the Garston B.B.A. did not hold the annual amalgamated show on 1st Jan., 1909. Being a member of the Garston Society, and having been one for a considerable time, my feelings were very much upset upon reading the correspondence, but not having an inclination to enter into a controversy with a writer who conceals his identity by the adoption of a nom de plume, I decided to allow the queries to pass by, so far as I personally was concerned, although I was fully cognizant of the fact that a serious blunder had been committed, and one that would cause disappointment to genuine fanciers. But reading in this and last week's issues letters signed by fanciers who have in my opinion the courage of their convictions, I feel it my duty as a member, and whether or not any official explanation is sent from the Secretary for publication, to reply, and to assure your numerous readers, especially the members of the clubs forming the Amalgamation, that the fault is entirely due to the unfortunate oversight, of Mr. A. Thompson, the recognised secretary at that time, who had absolute power to arrange everything for the carrying on of the show. At our recent monthly meetings we have thoroughly discussed this unfortunate matter, and are agreed as to who is culpable. At our general meeting the members when selecting the officers for the ensuing year appointed fanciers who, it is hoped, can be relied upon to prevent a recurrence of this regrettable affair. In conclusion, I venture to asert that I am voicing the desire of the members of the Garston Association in asking each and every member in the Amalgamated Society to accept their sincere regret at the disappointment caused, and to assure Mr. John Hunt, the respected Secretary of the Bootle Society (which is expected to hold the next Amalgamated Show on 1st January, 1910), that he can rely on our members giving him their hearty support, together with a bumping entry.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Hunt's letter as to why the amalgamated show was not held this year as usual, certainly this requires some explanation from the officials of the Garston Society, and might I suggest that Mr. A. Thompson, the one-time Secretary of that Society, be good enough to enlighten us on the subject? I can assure Mr. Hunt that the members of our Society were greatly disappointed that the show was not held. From what I have heard, Mr. A. Thompson was acting on behalf of the Garsten Society and was also Secretary of the Liverpool Bird Breeders' Association; so he practically held the arrangements in the hollow of his hand. Perhaps the Secs. of Birkenhead and Wallasey will explain if they were consulted on the above at all? I am very pleased to see that Mr. Hunt intends to take the running of the amalgamated show next year, and I have been authorised on behalf of the members of my Society to support him in every way to make the show a success.

R. E. HAWKES,
Secretary Liverpool Bird Breeders.

SIR,—In reference to Mr. Hunt's letter, he says that the late Bootle Secretary was informed by some one acting for Garston Society. Does he mean to say that Bootle got information that Garston was not going to run a show? If so, why did not Bootle run it? Does Mr. Hunt think that no other society can run one without referring to Liverpool? Mr. Hunt must not run away with that idea, knowing that the Liverpool Bird Breeder and Wallasey Associations have taken a turn, and were well merited with success. I hope Mr. Hunt will run this show for Bootle next year, and we all hope for a record entry and a good gate, and then he will find out that the other society's boys and birds will be on the job next year. We all hope he will not fail at the eleventh hour, as we will want rooms and judges.

THE CAGE BIRD FANCY IN BARTON AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—May I claim a little space in your valuable paper, in order to answer Mr. Chamberlain's letter of last week? I don't want to write a series of letters, but I think Mr. Chamberlain is a bit unfair. Now, Mr. Chamberlain, of course you may vindicate your own cause, and try to persuade people that your club is the best, but don't you think that by talking round our members, abusing our hon. secretary, and telling us through the medium of CAGE BIRDS we have only a few "songsters," you are overstepping the mark? When we formed the club it was unanimously agreed to hold our meetings apart from a public-house, but as that didn't suit you and others, you were quite in order in leaving us and forming a rival society. But now you have left us, please leave us alone. I and others joined the club in a sporting spirit, and we mean to carry it through in the way we joined. A little "friendly" rivalry is a very good thing, and ought to be acceptable to all. I want no one to praise my "songsters," but like to have the opinion of anyone who understands them. Neither you nor any of your party have seen any of our birds (barring those you sold to one of our members; but perhaps you had forgotten that), so how can you form any adequate idea of what they are like? Perhaps you have some good birds now; of course, everyone can change. As regards your six members who had last season 300 birds, I understand one of these persons has about 50 for sale; if they are good stuff, how is it that you and others in your club are sending out of town for birds? It is my first and, I hope, my last time of writing on this subject, and I will say in conclusion that when the shows come round we will stage as good birds as we can, and then if you beat us, all credit to you. But don't count your Canaries before they are hatched.

A Few Hints to Intending Competitors.

1.—Always keep a copy of "C.B." in your pocket, and ask all your acquaintances who keep pet cage-birds of any kind: "Have you seen CAGE BIRDS?" If they say: "No," ask them, as a favour to you, to look through the copy in your possession, and then get them to write their full names and addresses in one of the spaces between the "rungs" of your ladder.

2.—Ascertain the names and addresses of all cage-bird keepers in your vicinity; then send each one in turn your copy of CAGE BIRDS, with your compliments, and ask them to attach their signature for their own benefit as well as yours.

3.—You can, if you choose, share the postcards received with the persons signing.

4.—Take your CAGE BIRDS to any shows, meetings, etc., which may be held in your neighbourhood, and there find out anyone whose name and address can be useful to you.

5.—If you are a cyclist take a run round the neighbourhood with your copy of "C.B.," and look up all the keepers of pet birds.

6.—It is not necessary for the persons signing to be exhibitors of birds, or even breeders, but they must be persons who keep cage-birds — it is our object to endeavour to stimulate the interest of all who keep pet birds, and provide them with a fuller insight into the hobby, so that they may take it up in a wider form.

AN EGG CRUSHER.

Sent by W. Bond, Hulme Street, Bromley Cross, near Bolton.

I enclose a sketch of an egg-crusher, which I think those who have not got an egg-mill will find very handy when breeding-time comes, which won't be long now. First get a piece of wood 4ins. long by 4ins. wide by 2ins. thick, and bore a 2in. hole in the middle. Then get a piece 4in. square by ½in.

thick, with a similar hole in the centre, and screw it to the bottom of the other piece. with a piece of perforated zinc between the two. Before, however, you screw the ½in. piece on, make two pieces 4ins. long by 1in. thick by ¾in. wide, and nail (or screw) to the bottom to form feet (as A in Fig. I). Then get a piece of wood turned like B, or make a piece round 1⅞in. diameter, to push the egg through the zinc with. The bottom is made to come off, so that the zinc can be replaced with a new piece any time required; a piece 2½in. square is plenty large enough to put in at a time.—W. BOND.

A NOVEL DOOR.

Sent by W. S. Dell, 22, Dane Road, Sale, Cheshire.

Enclosed you will find a pencil sketch of the type of door I have in use on my loose fronts. I find it not only improves the appearance of the fronts, but also does away with any hole in the fronts for the egg-drawer. It is practically a door inside a door. The places marked X are not soldered. The idea will be readily understood on examining the drawing. When using my cage for Yorkshires, I put the egg-food pan underneath the large door, in place marked A. Then I open the small door wide and hang on a show-cage as usual. The birds do not have to pass over the egg-food to enter the show-cage. A piece of wire is soldered across the lower part of the door, to strengthen it, and is afterwards cut at every third wire from the side. Another piece is soldered across near the top.—W. S. DELL.

THE SHOWS.

GUISBORO' & DIST. (Priory) C.B.S.

Pair show and usual meeting held March 13th, at Wear's Cafe, when three new members were elected, one from Dinsdale and two from Lingdale. Mr. J. C. Barnes was elected to adjudicate at our open show on January 1st, 1910. It was proposed that we have a concert in aid of the society's funds. Young stock show, July 17th. The pair show and judging competition proved a huge success, the cup being won by Mr. J. O. Cook for the competition. The principal awards were: YORKS.: 1, 2, Cook; 3, Taylor. NOR.: 1, Jackson; 2, 3, Jones. CREST AND C.B.: 1, Starling; 2, 3, Blackburn. BORD.: 1, 2, Atkinson; 3, Knaggs. HYB.: 1, Taylor; 2, Jackson; 3, Atkinson. BRIT.: 1, 2, Jobling; 3, Dunning. SELL. ### STOCKPORT B.F.A.

Usual meeting and table show of British birds, held March 16th, at Boar's Head Hotel. A good number of members and friends were present, but the show was rather disappointing, the entries, considering the classification, being rather poor. We hope that next time we shall have more entries. The specimens reflected great credit on the owners, especially the winning Goldfinch, Yellowhammer, and Thrush. Mr. G. H. Massey judged, and his awards gave every satisfaction.—

LEYTON DISTRICT C.B.A.

A capital show of British birds was held at the Constitutional Club on March 8th. The exhibits "had their fortunes told" by Mr. J. S. Clarke, and the awards were well received. There was not a bad specimen staged. The hon. sec., Mr. B. F. Forse, loyally assisted by a splendid working committee, achieved another success. The association is going very strong.

GOLDFINCH (7): 1, 3, Hale, 1st nice-coloured Finch, good size and steady; 3rd, very neat; 2, vhc, Bartlett, fresh caught, extraordinary blaze and colour, very steady, hall-marked British; hc, Cooper; c, Godfrey. HEN (1): 1, Godfrey, rich-coloured Goldfinch hen; as she had the class to herself, the judge did not argue with her as to her nationality.

CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

The City and Suburban Society held its annual British and foreign bird show at headquarters, on March 13th, and scored another success. The entry was splendid, and the quality of the exhibits and the manner of their staging can only be spoken of in terms of the highest praise. Many well-known exhibitors are members, and they gave visitors a display that few open shows could better. Most points for the "Francis" cup were scored by Mr. F. Wyse, who showed a good team, and also had on view his electric drying cage, much the best thing of this kind we have ever seen, and which attracted much attention. Miss Shepherd won the lady's special with a lovely Scarlet Tanager. There was a good attendance, and Mr. Wynn, the popular secretary, and his staff of helpers, are to be congratulated on the admirable arrangements. During the evening a buff Norwich Plainhead, kindly given by Mr. H. Robbins, was offered for sale, the proceeds going towards wiping out the deficit on the pair show. Mr. C. Prior made the awards, and gave entire satisfaction.

TIDESWELL C.B.I.S.

First annual pair show held at the Star Inn on March 29th. There were 41 entries, and some grand specimens were exhibited. Mr. Fox (Chesterfield) judged, and gave satisfaction. At 6 o'clock the members partook of a supper, provided by Miss Bagshawe in a splendid manner. After this the evening was spent in songs and the general advancement of the cage-bird Fancy.

The Construction and Furnishing of an Outdoor Birdroom.

By J. W. LAWTON.

This subject will, I hope, be of interest to those about to start in the fascinating hobby of bird-keeping, and also to those old stagers who have kept their birds indoors and are desirous of removing them to outside quarters.

A Point to Remember.

The first thing, of course, is the amount of room a fancior has at his disposal for the erection of an aviary or a suitable outdoor birdroom, and as the by-laws of our large towns are of a very stringent character in this respect it is not every fancier that will have the necessary 15 feet between the main building and the one he wishes to erect, this being the prescribed amount of air-space required by the municipal authorities in most towns; and it would be well for any fancier to make himself acquainted with the particular by-laws in his own town before proceeding with the erection of anything appertaining to an outdoor birdroom. There are many fanciers who favour a southern aspect, but I do not think this matters a great deal, as by choosing a northern or eastern aspect you get a more equable temperature in the summer, and if your aviary or room is made "right and tight" you will be able to keep the birds nice and cosy through the winter.

An Outdoor Bird-Room Described.

I will now try to describe in the best way I can the way in which to construct an outdoor birdroom, such as the one I have built myself. I may say I make no pretensions to being a master hand at joinery. I will deal first with the size of the room and the materials required.

Dimensions of aviary: — Outside measurements, 6ft. by 9ft. by 6ft. 7ins.; height, 7ft. from floor to eaves, and 8ft. 8ins. from floor to ridge. The frame is built of 2in. by 1½in. sparring, and is made in sections to bolt together, the roof to be in two sections. The window, 4ft. by 3ft., is made in three sections, the middle one being made to open.

Materials required, and the cost of same:—1,000ft. matchboards, 4s. 2d. per 100ft., £2 1s. 8d.; 200ft. spruce for frame, 8s. 4d.; oilcloth for floor, 4s. 6d.; a door (second-hand), 2s.; sash styling and bars for window frame, 2s. 6d.; glass for window, 1s. 6d.; 100ft. of flooring boards, 6s. 6d.; pediments and B. boards for roof, 2s.; felting, 4s. 6d.; paint, 5s.; sundries, 4s. 6d. This makes a total cost of £4 3s.

Constructing the Birdroom.

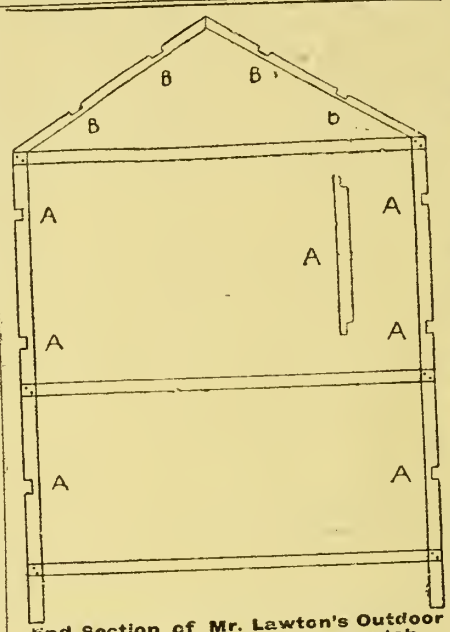
First of all, start with one of the end sections. Take two pieces of the 2in. by 1½in. sparring, cut them both the same length for the corner uprights, and then cut two pieces for the top and bottom crossbars. Slot these together at each corner as per sketch A; see that they are cut as true as possible, then your place will be straight and level when finished. Next screw at the corners. The bottom crossbar should be fixed about four inches from the bottom of the corner uprights, the portion below the crossbar forming four legs or feet one at each corner, which will keep your birdroom off the ground and allow plenty of fresh air to get beneath it. This will also keep out the damp.

Next cut two pieces to carry rafters for the roof; slot them out as per sketch marked B, for letting rafters in. Then cut the right size and nail it to the top crossbar, and your frame for the end section is complete. Lay the frame flat on the ground (which must be as level as possible), and then run the square over it. Get it true, and then take your matchboarding and start at one edge of your frame. Mark the board off the top, and nail on level, and so on until you have covered the whole with matchboards, keeping them close up as you proceed. When you have done this, make the other end section, leaving a space in this one for the door in the centre.

Place each of the two end sections now completed in position on the space where your birdroom will stand; get them perfectly level. Then let in the bars for carrying the side sections (marked A in sketch), leaving a space for the window on one side, whichever you prefer. Then belt the bars together at the points marked A, and cover both sides with matchboarding; next let the rafters in for the roof at the points marked B in the sketch. Lay on the roof and nail it to the rafters, allowing the boards to overlay about two inches at each end, and four inches at sides. Cover these over with a good felt. Then fix B. boards, ridging board, and pediments, put the window in, and hang the door. If you can get a window second-hand, so much the better, as it will save your having to make one, this being a tedious job unless you can get a practical man to mortise the frame together for you.

Next cut spaces out at each end, about ten inches from the top, for ventilation purposes; make and fix the ventilators.



End Section of Mr. Lawton's Outdoor Birdroom, ready for nailing matchboarding to.

Then give the whole a coat of paint outside; this will keep the wet out while you proceed with the inside work.

You must now cover the whole of the inside (roof ends and sides as well) with matchboards, packing the space between the boards with fine shavings, straw, or sawdust, whichever you prefer. When this is done, give the inside of your birdroom one coat of paint. Then lay the floor in. Give another coat of paint inside, and let this get thoroughly dry, and then your birdroom will be ready for use.

Furnishing the Interior.

The next thing is the furnishing of the interior. If you should have sufficient cages, it will not be necessary to make any of these, but if you have not got the cages, I would advise you to make them to fit your room, and all to one pattern. For a room such as I have described I would advise two four-compartment cages with sliding divisions, which could be used for breeding and then turned into two good flights for the winter. These should be placed on the side facing the window. You should have single cages for the end facing the door. This will then give a finish to your room, and you will find your cages have a very neat appearance.

You will also find that a bench or table placed underneath the window is a very useful article of furniture, especially so if you have two or three drawers fixed beneath same; you will find these very useful for storing seeds, nest pans, drinkers, tools, etc., in. The bench or table will also be a great aid in keeping your room nice and tidy. A shelf placed beneath the drawers will come in handy, too, for packing away cases, show cages, etc.

If you require any artificial heat, I would advise the use of a good patent stove, one of which I have used with very good results.

So much then for the inside of the birdroom. You must now turn your attention to the outside again. Give two more coats of paint, adding plenty of driers to it, and, in addition, put to the last coat a small quantity of best varnish; this will give it a good finish, and it will also last longer. When all this is done, your birdroom will not require much doing to it for a considerable time. If there are any points that are not quite clear, I shall be pleased to answer any questions relating to same through CAGE BIRDS.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

Grey Wagtails in Winter.

During the severe weather, when the ground was covered with snow, many birds frequented the margins of the streams and pools, so plentiful in the district. The gorgeous Kingfisher came right into the centre of the village, and was frequently visible round the large pond opposite the old church. This water is partly surrounded by trees, some of the branches of which overhang, spreading some distance from the bank. From these he would drop into the water, but did not appear to be very successful in his fishing operations. It is very doubtful if small fish can be at all plentiful here, for the semi-wild ducks are constantly hunting round the edges, and a pair or two of dab-chicks are continually fishing; and these little fellows are so smart that very few small fish can escape them. This water never freezes, not even in the most severe weather, so, naturally, wild birds make for it in bad times. At another part of the village a stream runs beside the roadway, the opposite bank being private ground, with a thick hedge growing down by the water-side. Here Thrushes, Blackbirds, Redwings, Tits, Wrens, and several Finches, were busy. It is to this spot the graceful Grey Wagtails come every autumn to spend the winter months. While staying here they get exceedingly tame and confiding, and by standing perfectly still under the archway of the bridge one can observe their movements almost as closely as though they were caged, or in an aviary. There are not more than two hundred yards of this stream by the roadway, and yet these beautiful birds seldom leave it for more secluded stretches of water. There is something about the Wagtail that is exceedingly fascinating, and the grey bird is no exception to the rule; in fact, I am inclined to think that he is the most engaging of the whole family. He flies from bank to bank with quick, jerky movements, occasionally settling upon some mass of floating rubbish, searching it carefully as it moves slowly down the stream. If one could only depict the scene, and give it the life and movement, it would make a most delightful subject. There is nothing exceptionally beautiful in the mass of rubbish or old log, gently moving with the current, but directly the "two or three ounces" of bird life settles upon it, the dark patch in the middle of the water becomes suddenly endowed with life and beauty.

Nightingales in Spain.

It is said that the Nightingale builds its somewhat ragged nest higher from the ground in some countries than it does here. This is especially the case in Spain, where snakes and lizards are common; the higher nest builders have survived, and so in time this habit has become established.

Cole Tit Hiding Food.

The Blue, Greater, and Cole Tits have all visited our hanging larder during the winter months, but the Cole Tits have only come occasionally, and when they do their doings are somewhat different to the others. They will first cling to the lump of fat and eat as much as they can, then breaking a piece off will fly with it to a rustic archway, and hunting among the crevices of the bank, find a snug hiding place and there hide it, flying back immediately for another supply. This they will repeat several times.

A Rook Battle.

"Country Life" publishes an account of a battle of Rooks, which took place some years ago in Ireland. The fight lasted three successive days over the city, and numbers of the killed fell into the streets. These fights between rival rookeries are not uncommon, but do not generally last so long.

Hardy Ground Birds.

During severe weather ground birds must have a very bad time of it, for as a general rule they sleep right in the open, disdaining to seek cover of any kind. When crossing a field at twilight one can put up Skylarks from any position, right out on the bare hillside or in the valley below, almost equally exposed, or among the turnips, where they appear to have a certain degree of shelter; but whether this is premeditated or accidental, one is unable to say. The Skylark is by nature so hardy that shelter of any kind appears quite a secondary matter, even in the selection of the nesting site, security from observation seems to be of chief importance.

It contains hundreds of testimonials from all parts with full names and addresses, many interesting facts, and gives valuable advice and hints to all Parrot buyers. Full details of our original system of selling Parrots on four week's trial, at our risk, which we were the first to introduce. We sell Parrots of all descriptions on four weeks' trial, at ou rrisk, before settlement. Cheapest and best in the Kingdom, and any Parrot sold by us, and not giving full satisfaction, will be exchanged any time within twelve months. Remember we lead and others try to follow. Write to other dealers as well as us, and judge for yourselves. Lists of Parrots for sale and above book post free on receipt of postcard.

PARROT AVIARIES, MORECAMBE.

To breed Budgerigars successfully you must have the "Improved Secure" Husks because they don't fall to pieces when in use as others do. They remain unequalled, and are different to any others. Individual testimonials don't count for much, so listen to what experts say:—"Cage Birds" says they are "far superior to the old husks." "Feathered World" says: "Undoubtedly, the new husks are very superior to the old." Again "Exchange and Mart" says: "You had better order the improved form; even if it is a little dearer than the old-fashioned sort, it is cheaper in the long run." "Fur and Feather" tells its correspondents: "They have distinct advantages over the old sort." "Poultry" has said: "For Budgerigars we advise the use of the improved style of husks." Surely these are convincing testimonials. They are 4/6 dozen; smaller quantities, 5d. each. Interesting pamphlet, entitled "Budgerigar Breeding," free on application. Superior box nests for Cockatiels, etc., 1/6. Send for the pamphlet now.

HARRY ALLEN

HAS 1,000 LINNETS & 4,000 NEW BOOKS

The sure guide for contest singers. Owing to the many letters that have been sent to me from different parts, how they sing at contests, I have made up my mind to publish a new book. It gives the correct rules of the Linnet Club, also states how they sing at contests, and how they hang their birds and follow in turns. It gives the correct time for quality and time singing. This will enlighten every purchaser. My book of secrets is also printed in this book; and how to save Greypates and Goldfinches from dying when fresh caught. Also how to keep Larks for contest singing, and what to feed them on, how to make your own food, and how to get them fit in a very short time now. All members of Linnet clubs and Lark clubs should send for one of these at once. These are the same rules as I won all my contests with, which are the finest rules in the world. The price of this book is the small fee of 9d., sent by return of post. No waiting. Linnets that can beat three score in two minutes in any window; send stamped addressed envelope. I am the only dealer in the world that can supply this class of birds. Over 1,000 beautiful red-breasted cock Linnets in stock. Very large steady muling Linnets, 2/6. I hold the world's record for mulers. Linnets, in full song, with a beautiful polished cage, and my book of secrets, and a packet of my special mixture, 3/6. This is a real bargain. Look! Fierce singing cock Linnets, with blood-red breasts and extra loud voices, with new cage, and my book of secrets, right for catching or contest singing, only 2/6. I defy any dealer in the world to supply the same for the money. I have 200 beautiful cock Greenfinches, nearly all yellows, and many of them can win, 1/6 and 2/-. Deposit your money with the Editor of this paper for honest stuff. All on seven days' approval. Linnets, taught by the world's champion, will sing anywhere, only 1/6; they are beautiful birds. Larks, singing grand, as steady as rocks, and as straight as arrows, 1/- and 1/6. A few singing extra loud, 2/6. I have 300 beautiful Canaries, cocks, singing hard, 7/6, 8/6, and 10/6; good muling hens, 2/-, 2/6, 3/-, and 6/6; red-breasted Redpolls, with hen Canary, 4/-; cock Greenfinches, with hen Canary, 3/6; cock Linnet, with hen Canary, 5/-; guaranteed to mule beautiful cock Thrushes and Blackbirds, singing extra loud, and in show condition, 4/- each. I have 50 beautiful cock Chaffinches, some fit to win, 1/6 and 2/-. Best Linnet whistlers in England, 6d. Four packets of my special mixture, 1/-. I thank Mr. Young, of Whitehaven, for having sent me a Linnet contest bill, which I think is very good, to be sung for on April the 20th, and the prizes are as follows: 1st prize, £3 10s.; 2nd prize, £2; 3rd and 4th prizes, 15/- each; 5th to 8th prizes, 6/3, to be sung on grass 10 yards apart, 2/6 each bird; you can enter your birds with Jos Gafraway, Anchor Vaults, Ginns, Whitehaven. Please read what others say. "5, Hamilton-road, Rutherglen.—Dear Sir,—I am more than satisfied with the Linnet you sent me. He is a splendid bird. You deserve to be encouraged for honest dealing. You are at liberty to use this testimonial in any way you please.—Yours truly, Henry Johnstone to H. Allen." Those who want real honest value for their money, write to the largest British bird dealer in the world.—Harry Allen, Bird Specialist and Judge, City Aviaries, 40, Beckett-st., Leeds.

you have noticed the large quantity of unsolicited testimonials that I publish every week, but you have never seen the still larger lot that I do not publish, have you? Together this vast amount of letters, all speaking in highest terms of praise of my Roller Canaries, prove without the shadow of doubt that no other Roller on the market can come within miles of them for quality of song and lowness of price, and that my advertisements every week are not flights of imagination, but solid, stubborn facts. I claim to be by far the largest retailer of Roller Canaries in the kingdom, and only importer of Hans Weber's Leipzig Rollers, of which I have an immense stock, all in full song day and gaslight, with long bollow and double rolls, sweet silvery trills, waterbubble runs, soft roulades, piccolo trills, hollow bell rolls, deep bass rolls, bell, harp, flute and Nightingale jug-jug notes, etc, etc., and guaranteed entirely free from chopping Titlark or other harsh notes, prices 6/6 and 7/6 each. Special bandmasters, which excel in the deep bass and hollow bell rolls, 10/- and 12/6 each; Roller hens, 3/- each, two 5/-. I also have a grand selection of guaranteed genuine "Seifert" contest masters, all in full song, at 15/-, 17/6, and 21/- each; Seifert hens, 4/- each. These Seifert cocks are of pure blood, and are in full song, ready for immediate contesting or breeding. Ordinary loud, free singing Hartz cocks, in full vigorous song, 5/- each, seven 31/6; Hartz hens, 2/- each, 3/6 couple. Roller-singing cabinets, with loose fronts and folding doors, 2/6 each. Singing box cages, 1/-, 1/2, 1/4, 1/6, 1/9, and 2/- each. Roller breeding cages, with loose fronts, 2/6 and 3/- each; double breeders, with loose fronts and sliding partitions, 4/6 each. All cages are joiner-made, for practical use, not "eye-sores." Few more letters given below, which have not been duplicated in this or any other paper "5, Patrick-place, Ballymena, Ireland, March 22nd. —Sir,—Received Roller safe, and I think him the best I have got, as he sings very well. Thanking you for straightforward dealing and satisfaction.—Yours, F. Falls." "Elms Lodge, Torre, Torquay, March 22nd.—Sir,—Am very much pleased with Roller. He started to sing so soon as unpacked. Thanks for prompt attention, straightforward dealing, and good packing.—Yours, J. Bolt." "235, Firs-lane, Leigh.—Sir,—I enclose P.O. for two more Rollers, as I have sold the last four I got from you. They are all singing splendid, and my customers would not sell them for treble the price they paid for them.—Yours, J. Cowburn." "17, Buckingham-street, Brighton, March 21st.—Sir,—Received birds in fine condition. The cock started singing as soon as let out. Thanks for prompt attention.—Yours, C. Cooper." "24, West-street, Worthing, March 20th.—Sir,—Birds arrived safe yesterday. I am well satisfied with them. Some of them were singing on the road from station.—Yours, J. Fyfield." "9, Scalford-road, Melton Mowbray, March 22nd.—Sir,—Rollers to band quite safe, and am well satisfied with them. It's a treat to sit and listen to the cock; my wife calls him a "perfect little gem." I shall send for more in a week or so.—Yours, A. Potter." "Sybil Villas, Clydach, March 19th.—Sir,—I have often read in CAGE BIRDS of birds sold by you singing as soon as unpacked, but the one you sent me (Seifert Roller) excels them all. He was singing at the station, and singing all along the road when carried home, and as soon as put into a bigger cage started again, and sang until 10.30 that night, only taking a little interval for seed and water, and is still the same. I have tried to stop him singing so much by covering the cage with a thick cloth, but he sings in the dark just the same. He won the singing match, beating the bird from ———, and has also won three more, beating birds imported direct from Germany. Everybody that visits here praise the "Gore bird"; his top notes are a little loud, but very melodious—not at all harsh. He starts wonderfully fine, and makes his changes lovely. There is not one in our district that can touch him. I don't hear anything about ——— now, nor Germany, since the conquest.—Yours, Morgan Morgans." "Brooks Mill, Audlem, March 18th.—Sir,—After having birds side by side for a week, I find your bird to have the sweetest notes and most changes. If only people that are wanting Rollers could have heard them side by side they would soon decide to have them from W. Gore. Thanking you for same, and when wanting another shall certainly send to you.—Yours, Albert Bebbington." "17, Bellfield-terrace, Coalburn Station, Scotland, March 15th.—Sir,—I am more than pleased with the Roller cock you sent me at 7/6. It is best value I ever got. I have had birds from about every advertiser in CAGE BIRDS and other papers, and must say your bird beats them all. I shall certainly get all my birds from you in future. I was also pleased with the Roller-singing cabinet; everybody admires it. Please send following.—Yours, John Stewart." You see now why I can call myself the largest retailer of Rollers in the kingdom, don't you? All birds are sent on full week's approval solely at my risk during the whole time, either on receipt of cash or CAGE BIRDS deposit system, and unless bird is perfectly satisfactory the whole of your money is promptly and cheerfully refunded. All are safely and warmly packed free of extra charge, and postcard sent before birds. I don't care how hard a person is to please, if I cannot do so from my large stock, no other dealer can. 10 lots of Yorkshires, all from well-known breeders, including one of the best known and leading Judges of Yorkshires in England, whose name with all Yorkshire Fanciers is a House old word. I quote his own words to me, "They are good enough for anyone to use."

Of course, it is easy to say all this, but in some cases not as easy to prove. Hence, though using no names, I have privately given same to to editor of this paper, as a matter of good faith. Professional copyists here have another opportunity of following, like "Mary's Little Lamb."

Now note some prices, value unapproachable. Allow me to send One or One Pair of mine on approval against any others advertised, at any of the following prices, I shall feel obliged. ### THE PARAGON STRAIN.

Is what the name implies, viz., the best of its kind the world can produce. It is not of recent growth, but has stood the test of time, and is the result of careful study and practical experience extending over a period of forty years. My record as a breeder and exhibitor of Yorkshire Canaries has never been equalled by any other firm or fancier during the period I have exhibited this variety. I have no special judges, my birds win at all leading shows and under all judges, and their continued success year after year is ample proof that the "Paragon Strain" stands pre-eminent as the most pure and reliable strain of the present day. If you desire to come to the front you should have the best, therefore send your requirements to the fountain-head. Three days' approval; stamped address for particulars.—W. H. Shackleton, Melrose House, Lytton-rd., Girlington, Bradford.

MANCHESTER & N. COUNTIES O.S.

A splendid gathering of members and friends attended a limelight lantern lecture at the Deansgate Hotel, on March 15th, given by Mr. S. W. Birchley. Some very beautiful pictures, taken direct from Nature, of the birds in their natural surroundings, were thrown on the screen, and in many instances the parent birds were shown feeding their young. The pictures were without doubt the best we have seen, and the lecturer described the subjects and their habits in a most attractive and interesting manner. He also showed some most life-like pictures of the present-day winning British birds, which were his own work, and amongst them we particularly noted the splendid Hawfinch, "Midland Chief," the property of Mr. H. J. Chick, of Nottingham. The views of the quaint nesting places of Robins, Tits, Wrens, etc., were charming, and the various places in which the lecturer described having found them were astonishing in number and character. Mr. Birchley has a most genial delivery, and this, combined with practicability, made the lecture well worth the earnest attention accorded him by his audience. Two songs were rendered by Miss Bancroft, which were heartily received. After most appreciative speech-making, the evening ended by a hearty vote of thanks being accorded Mr. Birchley.—E. JONES, assist. secretary.

WIBSEY AND DISTRICT O.B.S.

Annual tea and social, held on March 13th, at the Horse and Groom Inn. The host and hostess catered, and placed one of their splendid knife-and-fork teas on the table. Eighty members and friends sat down to do justice to the bill of fare. After tea a programme was drawn up, and songs were sung and encores given by Messrs. P. Bastow, W. Hillas, and H. Barker. Mr. Barker's contribution, "When the missus is in," justed suited the ladies. Mr. S. Dean was then called upon to present the medals to the winners for points gained during 1908, and in a few well-chosen words presented that for most points to Mr. J. Chapman (of Messrs. Chapman and Bateman). Mr. J. Crowther, our president, was the winner of the second medal, and Mr. C. Hardaker of the third. Mr. W. Jowett received Mr. Ramsden's medal for best cock bird on Boxing Day. Mr. S. Hindle, the show steward, was also presented with a medal for his services at the show. Anybody who has seen the manner in which the birds are handled and attended to will say he earned what he had got. After this Messrs. Bairstow and Chapman sang a duet, and this was followed by the secretary's report. At the present time, he said, the society is close on 90 strong, and has a balance in hand of nearly £6. We are looking forward to still better results during the coming year, and give all fanciers a hearty invitation to join us. The remainder of the evening was devoted to music, and songs were sung by Messrs. W. Chapman, A. Hiley, J. Baldwin, and Fawcett. Closing time came, as usual, too soon. —E. W. JOHNSON, hon. secretary.

SOWERBY BRIDGE AND DIS. C.B.S.

The annual tea and social were held on March 20th, at the Bull's Head Hotel, close upon fifty members and friends being present. An excellent tea was provided by the host and hostess, and afterwards a capital programme was gone through. Songs were given by Miss Nora Tasker and Mr. Harry Tasker, and these songs were beautifully illustrated by limelight views by the Secretary, and were thoroughly appreciated. Songs were also rendered by Miss Barnes and Mr. Kenyon. Mr. J. Nicholson delighted everyone with his humorous characters. Miss Nora Tasker proved an efficient accompanist. Two recitals were given by Mr. E. Crossley. During the evening the Secretary presented the prizes to the winning members for most points gained at the monthly shows. The silver challenge cup (to be held for the ensuing year) was won by Messrs. Taylor and Haigh, and along with it a lady's gold bangle in Section I. J. E. Priestley (also cup), 2; J. Robertshaw, lady's umbrella, 3; Crossley Bros., silver spoon, 4. Section II.: C. Pickles, gold medal, 1; E. Sutcliffe, lady's gold necklet, 2; H. Tasker, pair of vases, 3; W. Wild, silver-plated jam dish and spoon, 4. The Society has had a very prosperous year, and are to be congratulated on their success. After giving the aforementioned specials, and also buying a silver cup for yearly competition, they are still able to show a balance on the right side. It is hoped during next season to again offer some good prizes. Will fanciers therefore help the Society by joining them and giving it their hearty support? After votes of thanks, dancing brought to a close a most pleasant and enjoyable evening.—A. E. MORTON, Hon. Sec.

DERBY CAGE BIRD CLUB.

Club meeting, held March 2nd, Mr. J. Drakeley in the chair. There was a discussion on the advisability or otherwise of holding an open show this year. It was decided that, as we had not "got over the last one yet," we do not hold one. But we shall have a members' show for old and young birds instead on the first week in November. It was also decided that all members who had not paid their levy before the night for the nomination of young birds in May be not allowed to nominate any, as this was felt to be an injustice to those members who had fulfilled their obligations. We had the pleasure of admitting three new members to our club.—W. STEVENS, Hon. Sec.

EDINBURGH EASTERN DIST. O.S.

The following is the list of honorary members and office-bearers for the ensuing year:—Hon. president, Councillor Lorne MacLeod; hon. vice-presidents, Councillors Hunter and Stewart, and Wm. Fletcher, Esq.; office-bearers: President, R. S. Spence; committee, Messrs. Dalling, Morrison, J. Dougall, Gourlay, Sneth, R. Smith, and McLennan; secretary and treasurer, Geo. R. Smith, 16, Lochend-road (West), Edinburgh; auditors, Messrs. A. Dougall and McLennan. The annual show will take place on 13th November, in Free Gardiners' Hall, Abbey Mount. We have been fortunate in securing the services of the following gentlemen to judge, viz., Mr. John McLennan, for the Scotch Fancy and Border sections, and Mr. D. Buchan (Falkirk) for the other sections.—GEO. R. SMITH, Secretary.

CARLISLE C.B.S.

Open meeting, held March 25th, when a washing exhibition was given by Messrs. T. H. Jones and F. F. Lawson, before a good muster of members and several visitors who greatly appreciated both gentlemen's efforts. They went about their business admirably in washing several birds. Mr. Jones had forward a drying cage of his own make. It has a tank at the bottom full of hot water. On top of same about 1 inch of sawdust was put. The cage was put with the front to the fire, when it was surprising how quickly the birds dried. The arrangement pleased everyone. Mr. Lawson adopted the rolling-up process in twill sheeting, and his method seemed to be quite as good as the tank arrangement, excepting that it took a little longer in the drying; but the birds had the required finish when on the sticks. Mr. Lawson invited someone else to have a try, when one of our new members, Mr. Crabtree, had a "go," and he made quite a creditable performance for a novice. Of course, his nerves were upset a bit with having so many lookers-on. The members then allotted the specials for the nest feather shows, the appointment of judge being left over to next meeting. It was carried that the best thanks of the meeting be given to Messrs. Jones and Lawson for their instructive exhibition. A letter was read from the Dean of Carlisle offering to become a patron of our society. It was decided to take solicitor's advice respecting the failure of one of our members to pay his subscription for last year, after taking the benefits in connection with our show. Greater harmony and enthusiasm never prevailed in this society than at the present time, everyone doing his best to make the society prosper. Carlisle fanciers note that our headquarters are the Viaduct Temperance Hotel.—W. H. WRIGHT, hon. secretary.

NATIONAL BRITISH BIRD AND MULE CLUB.

Committee meeting held at headquarters, The Feathers Hotel, Westminster, on March 25th. Present: Mr. Robson (chairman), Messrs. J. Dewhurst, T. R. Trower, F. Wyse, W. A. Lott, J. Best, Geo. Thurling, G. E. Weston, C. T. Maxwell, R. A. Newley, and A. Plumbridge, and visitor, Mr. S. W. Birchley. Letters were read from Messrs. David Bentley, G. T. H. Maggs, R. Bald, A. W. Watson, A. Coffey, J. P. Carr, G. Crabb, A. C. Askew, and J. Hazell. Respecting the alleged stained Linnet of Mr. S. W Birchley's (Altrincham), as Mr. Birchley had come up on purpose to answer the charge made against him, the chairman thought it best that the committee should give him a hearing first, as Mr. Birchley desired to leave as early as possible, so that he might get home the same night. He was given a patient and attentive hearing, after which he left to catch his train. Much discussion followed, but the meeting did not come to any final decision in the matter. It was therefore proposed by Mr. Newley, and seconded by Mr. Dewhurst, "that further discussion be adjourned to give the secretaries time to get, if possible, additional information; and that Mr. Birchley be asked to send all original letters and copies of his own, including those of Messrs. Pope, Maggs, Ind, and Lythgoe." Proposed by Mr. Wyse, and seconded by Mr. Trower, "that a letter be written to Mr. House, the judge at Bristol Show, also to Mr. J. Walsh." Proposed by Mr. Dewhurst, and seconded by Mr. Newley, "that Messrs. Fattorini's account for medals be paid." Respecting the alleged staining of a Bullfinch by Mr. McQuiston, it was proposed by Mr. Trower, and seconded by Mr. Newley, "that a letter be written to Mr. McQuiston, to Mr. John Brown, the judge, and to Mr. Samuel Ward, the witness. Proposed by Mr. Dewhurst, and seconded by Mr. Maxwell, "that Mr. McQuiston's medal be sent him." The following new members were elected:—Mr. F. Currey, 15, Pitts Head Mews, Park-lane, London, W.; and Mr. J. M. Walsh, 159, Dukes Brow, Blackburn. A hearty vote of thanks to the chairman concluded a long and arduous meeting.—PLUMBRIDGE AND CARR, Hon. Secs.

LEEDS C.B.S.

Committee meeting held on March 24th. There were present Messrs. Chambers, Chew, Medley, Tose, Smith, Hallett, Owen, Stead, Ireland, McMillan, Farrar, Whiteley, and Wilkins. The chief discussion was how to allocate the special prizes (16), which comprise a two-guinea silver cup, a pair of men's boots, silver medals with gold centres, etc. It was ultimately agreed to arrange the prizes in rotation, according to value, to be won on points at the five shows, the highest six birds of a member to count. Messrs. Hyde and Co. (London) are also giving special prizes of seed and food at each of the shows. There are also the Leeds challenge cup and vice-president's cup, to be competed for at the July and Christmas shows, which should satisfy the most ambitious members before this season closes. Dear Sir,

Fanciers have had many foods placed before them as substitutes for the home-made egg food, such as yellow biscuit meal, and foods containing an infinitesimal percentage of egg (possibly none at all) or yolk of egg, a bad smelling, insoluble, indigestible substance, more often than not manufactured from bad eggs, and naturally they have been discarded with disgust by practical and thinking Fanciers, and the old method reverted to.

What has been wanted is a food with a guaranteed percentage of fresh eggs, showing the same nutriment as when in the raw state, also the absence of colouring matter as a guarantee of purity. We give all these guarantees, and have satisfied the leading Fanciers that what has been badly wanted is now procurable.

We guarantee our "EGG & BISCUIT" to contain 50% of actual egg, and advise you to send for a sample 6d., or 1/- tin at once; postage paid, 7½d. and 1/3.

Yours faithfully,

FOX BROS. & CO.

BO'NESS AND DISTRICT O.A.

Annual meeting held at Coffee House Hall, March 13th, when the Sec. gave a very favourable report showing a balance-sheet £1 15s. 8d. to the good. Thomson (Newtongrange), for the Border Fancy section, J. Brown (Edinburgh) and W. Cullen (Crieff) for the British bird and Mule sections. We thank exhibitors for their entries in the past, and hope still more will rally round us this year, seeing it is now to be an entirely cage bird show with specialist judges.—FINDLAY MCGILLIVRAY, Hon. Sec.

NORWICH ALLIANCE C.B.A.

Successful Smoking Concert.

In the unavoidable absence of Mr. J. J. W. Deuchar, the president, the chair at the smoking concert held at Orford Arms, March 24th, was occupied by Mr. A. W. F. Bagge. Amongst the large company present were Messrs. J. Mackley, W. W. Freestone, F. Cullington, E. Bennett, J. Calver, A. Payne, E. Clarke, E. Revell, H. Smith, E. Fox, W. Nichols, E. P. Gilbert, J. Parsons, G. Roberts, J. Freeman, A. W. Russell, J. Gowing, and R. Roll (secretary). A most entertaining programme had been arranged, contributors to the harmony being Messrs. E. Goodwyn, W. Markwell, T. E. Miles, Smith, Enslie, W. J. Barton (bassoon solo), S. Thompson, Mallett, W. Nichols, W. Thorpe, W. Young, Phillpot, and C. Wood (accompanist). In proposing the toast of "The Honorary Subscribers," with which was coupled the name of Mr. Mackley, Mr. E. Bennett said it would be a fine thing for the Fancy of Norwich if the Corporation would only put up a plate, to be termed the Norwich Corporation Plate, for competition amongst Canary breeders. Canaries were a feature of Norwich as well as the races at Yarmouth, and the Yarmouth Corporation offered a plate for competition at their annual meeting. The association's prize list required amplifying also, for the association aimed for all that was best with regard to the Fancy. Mr. Mackley, in responding, said that by subscribing to the association people were helping those who could not help themselves. Canary breeding was one of the staple trades of the city, as there were something like three or four thousand breeders. He could not congratulate them upon the progress they had made in recent years, but such a society as they represented that night was capable of doing an immense amount of good. He did not see why Norwich should not again hold its head against all comers, for there was not a county in the whole of the kingdom that could breed better birds than Norfolk. There was a lack of the type that was really wanted, and it was for them as breeders to find out what that type was if they intended to make headway. He thought if the suggestion made by Mr. Bennett was fairly laid before the City Council something would come of it, and the nature of the prize would be the means of bringing into the city something they could not get at the present time. "Success to the N.A.A.E.C.B.A." was proposed by the chairman and responded to by Mr. R. Roll, whose name was coupled with the toast. A special tribute was paid to the secretary, and his name was received with musical honours. Mr. R. Roll having made an acknowledgment, Mr. Freestone submitted "The President"; whilst Mr. F. Cullington proposed "The Visitors and Kindred Societies," to which Messrs. W. E. Greaves, H. Dunham, and E. Fox replied.

BROXBURN & DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held in the Draughts Room, Public Hall, on March 26th; Mr. Thomas Sharp presided over a large attendance. Mr. William Rogers (Slateford) was appointed to judge this Scotch Fancy section. It was agreed to add one class for common Canary and one for any variety not classed, making a total of 55 classes for the annual show.—DAVID ANTHONY, secretary.

NORTHERN YORKSHIRE O.C.

Meeting held in Lockhart's Cafe, Grainger-street, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on March 24th, Mr. D. E. Kent in the chair. Mrs. R. Irwin Dees, one of our lady members, and Mayoress of Wallsend, was elected a vice-president. A vote of sympathy for and confidence in our vice-president, Dr. O'Neal (Fulwell), was unanimously passed, all present expressing their belief that Dr. O'Neal was not only incapable of faking birds, but far above stooping to such unfanclerlike practices. It was hoped that he would soon take up the Fancy again, and especially the variety in which he has been so successful, namely, Yorkshires. It was decided to hold four table shows this year, the classes to be the same as at last year's—clear birds, and ticked, marked or variegated. The dates and judges are:—March 26th, Mr. Ellwood; June 16th, Mr. Shepherd; July 6th, Mr. Thompson; and July 28th, Mr. Cockburn. It was decided to raise subscriptions for a cup for most points over the four shows, and, if sufficient funds, to have a special for second most points. I shall be pleased to receive any subscriptions towards this fund. Members who intend showing at these First Feather shows must first pay the annual subscription. It was decided that societies wishing our patronage at autumn shows must provide at least five classes in the open, and two novice classes for novice patronage. New members elected: Messrs. Johnson and Tomlinson.—T. C. CRAWHALL, Hon. Sec.

GREEN CANARY ASSOCIATION.

Annual Meeting.

Annual general meeting, held in Oldham Hall, Liverpool, on March 25th. Owing to a very sad bereavement, Mr. Handley was not able to take the chair. Mr. Hales presided. Messrs. Walker and Harrison having tied for the Norwich Green champion medal, it was decided to give them both one. The balance-sheet was passed, after a lively discussion, and a scheme for giving greater detail suggested by the auditors was agreed to. The following officers were then elected:—President, J. Walker; chairman, W. Hales; vice-chair, J. W. Metcalfe; treasurer, J. H. Isaac; assistant secretary, R. Brotherton; auditors, V. Lawson (the other one not being decided); committee, V. H. Deacon, T. Rowlands, R. Athertou, H. A. Nimmo, T. Wardale, J. Dixon, and J. Gore. At 10.40 the meeting stood adjourned till April 22nd, when all business after election of officers will be taken.—S. HADWIN, secretary, 28, Pembroke Place, Liverpool.

CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

The largest attended meeting for many months took place at headquarters on February 22, all bent on showing their appreciation of Mr. Prior for coming to lecture on the subject: "Is it necessary to Colour-feed British Birds?" Nominated for membership: Messrs. C. Hawes, J. Grove, R. Knight, and A. Baker. Prize money won at the recent pair show and special prizes were presented. Special prizes, Nos. 8, 15, 21, resulting in ties, the same were drawn for, the winners being: 8, W. Mugford; 15, G. Saytch; 21, W. Page. Mr. Crisp, delegate to the London Federation, gave a report. The silver-plated cup presented by Mr. W. Francis for the most points in the British seed-eating section was on view; also another by an anonymous donor for the most points gained by a novice; both donors were accorded a vote of thanks. Ballot for judges: Young Bird Show, J. Robson, 41 votes. Annual show, Canary section: J. Robson, 35 votes, R. L. Crisp 27. Brit. and For. section, A. Silver 34 votes; 118 papers sent out and 63 returned (can anyone explain why, after stamped envelopes are supplied, our members will not return them?). In consequence of Mr. A. C. Burn being elected auditor of the London Federation, Mr. A. W. Curtis was elected as delegate to fill the vacancy. In a fitting speech, the chairman introduced Mr. C. Prior to deliver his lecture. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Prior was carried with acclamation, and the lecturer suitably replied. A vote of thanks to the chairman closed the meeting.—V. WYNN, Hon. Sec.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

Rudd, the well-known bird specialist, of Norwich, including one choice lot from a noted breeder and judge in the county of broadacres (whose name has been given us), and these birds are all on sale to Mr. Rudd's customers.

The Norwich Plainhead Canary Club's handbook and report for 1909 show that its position has been well maintained, and a good year's work got through, the disappointing features being the heavy defeats sustained in the two inter-club contests, through failure of the members to support them. The funds are in a satisfactory position. It is hoped that during 1909 the membership will show a substantial increase, and the secretary, Mr. J. Hopkins (126, Bury New Road, Bolton), will be glad to hear from anyone who would like to join.

This is a thorough and practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, written by a well-known expert and judge. It contains chapters dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, and an illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman, reproduced in the finest art style. There are also exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge approached by no other book of its kind at the price

Will exhibitors please note that the Keynsham Show will be held on November 24th under C.B.U. rules, write Messrs. E. W. Chappell and W. R. Cridland, the hon. secretaries.

Messrs. Kirkland and Hadley have resigned the secretaryship of the Burton-on-Trent C.B.S. through pressure of business, write Messrs. Elliott and Wood, and the post will now be taken by us. Our address is 69, Queen, Street, Burton-on-Trent.

The members of the Vale of Leven and Dumbartonshire O.S., writes Mr. R. Conely, the secretary, are asked to make a special effort to attend the meeting to be held at the Co-operative Hall, Bank Street, Alexandria, on April 2nd, when the chief business will be the annual show business, the election of a president, etc.

The Dulwich O.S. is holding a whist drive, writes Mr. Woolhouse, at the Imperial Hall, on April 5th, at 8.15 p.m., tickets 1s., and we trust members and friends will patronise the event and help to make it a success both financially and socially. Tickets may be obtained from Messrs Rogers and Bruty, "The Herne," Peckham Rye.

I am pleased to tell you that I am able to take up my Fancy again in Norwich Plainheads, writes Mr. H. Goodland (Bournemouth), and I hope to get as nice luck as before with them. I always found good customers for good birds all over the country through advertising in CAGE BIRDS, which I cannot speak too highly of, as our Fancy paper.

Kindly inform those who answered my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, respecting Greypate Finches, writes Mr. E. Rink (Blackburn), that I am unable to comply, as one of them has taken badly and is not fit to send out. Also inform those who say "send on, be not afraid," that I only send on deposit.

One of the favourite nests of the "canny" breeders in Scotland is that which Messrs. Smith, Fletcher and Co. (172, High Street, Edinburgh), are advertising in our columns. Made of papier-mache (blocked out) and lined with swansdown, this nest is extremely strong and warm, yet light as a feather. The price is very low indeed, and breeders will do well to see it and judge for themselves as to its great merit.

At the meeting of the Wimbledon and Dis. C.B.S. on April 5th, at 6, The Broadway, writes Mr. H. Smith, the hon. secretary, Mr. H. Norman has kindly promised to give us a lecture on "The keeping of British Birds." This is sure to prove most interesting and instructive, and I hope fanciers will turn up in force. We have already a good number of lady members, and shall be pleased to see them on this occasion. Our Young Bird Show is fixed for July 5th, judge Mr. J. Robson, and our Annual Show for November 16th and 17th, judges, Messrs. H. Norman and J. Robson.

We have received a copy of the annual report and balance-sheet for 1908-9, of the Green Canary Association, from the secretary, Mr. S. Hadwin. In the former it is pointed out that financially speaking the year was not a good one, although taking into consideration the fact that two grants to secretaries came into the accounts, there was a slight profit on the year's working. The debit balance is actually 13s. 5d., but when it is also remembered that over £14 was paid out in respect of prizes for the shows receiving its patronage, the association is to be congratulated on the result.

"Enquirer" wishes to know if it is one of the ideas of the London Federation of C.B.S. to eliminate some of the more recently established London societies. He is of the opinion that there are far too many minor bodies revolving around the Metropolitan cage bird globe, and hopes that "the promoters will succeed in their ambitious designs to form one strong united corporation guided by two or three strong spirits." We regret we cannot satisfy "Enquirer's" curiosity, but would refer him to the hon. secretary of the Federation, who will, no doubt, be delighted to give him full particulars of the Federation's intentions.

With reference to my Mule advertisement of last week, as there are others of the same name in the district, writes Mr. Fred. Wharton, kindly note that my full postal address is: Park Cottage, Thorp Arch, Boston Spa, S.O.

A very ingenious cardboard nestpan, with hair lining, has been put on the market by Mr. T. H. Dent (4, Langton Street, Preston), who claims that at the very low price it can be thrown away after use, thus ensuring perfect cleanliness. It is sent out with hanger, all complete.

The Bradford (East) O.S. have issued a list of members' shows to be held during 1909. Three First Feather Shows will be held—on June 12th, July 3rd, and July 24th—and three Old Bird Shows—September 25th, November 13th, and December 27th. The exhibitions will be held at headquarters, Park Chapel Schools, West Bowling. We note that in the classification the novices are very extensively catered for. The subscription is 3s. per annum, and the secretary is Mr. H. Hill, 31, St. Stephen's Road, West Bowling, Bradford.

We hear that the following are the specials to be competed for at the Nest Feather and Annual Old Shows of the Liverpool Bird Breeders' Association. For the champions, a silver cup value £3 3s. for 1st, a gold medal value £1 1s. for 2nd, and a gold centre silver medal for 3rd most points. For the novices, a gold medal value £1 1s. for 1st, and a gold centre silver medal for 2nd most points; and a silver medal for the one making most entries. A rose bowl is offered in the selling and A.O.V. classes for most points. In the British bird sections a silver plated cup is offered to champions for 1st most points, and a rose bowl for the novice making most points. For conditions of competition and particulars respecting membership, communication should be made with the secretary, Mr. F. E. Hawkes, 1, Gt. Crosshall Street, Liverpool.

A capital little hand-book, entitled "The Book of the Bicycle," is being issued by Messrs. Rudge Whitworth, of Coventry. A section of the booklet is devoted to a description of the best way of unpacking the bicycles and the detachment and fitting together again of the various adjustments. The chapter on "gears and coaster hubs" and that on "tyres," together with hints on the adjustment and lubricating of the former, and the fitting on and mending of the latter are exceptionally useful features; while the tabular statement of the interchangeable parts of the Rudge Whitworth bicycle (illustrated by diagram) will be found of the greatest value. The pamphlet contains a large number of illustrations. Cyclists should not hesitate to send to the proprietors of this famous machine, Messrs. Rudge Whitworth, Ltd., Coventry (mentioning CAGE BIRDS when doing so), for a copy of their latest publication, "The Book of the Bicycle."

Wanted!

We want a bound copy of volume 13 of CAGE BIRDS, and will exchange volume 14 (bound) for the same. Will any reader who has vol. 13 to spare kindly communicate with us?

What is a Clear?

We note from the year-book of the Norwich Plainhead Club that a bye-law has been passed to the effect that: "A bird showing no dark feathers while standing on the perch is eligible to compete in the Clear Classes."

The Crested Canary Club Judges.

I am advised by Mr. T. Heath (auditor), writes Mr. J. S. Clarke, hon. secretary and treasurer of the Crested Canary Club, that as Mr. Barnett declines to accept the position of club judge, I came next on the list at the last election, being left out on that occasion by one vote only.

Ill-Treatment of Peacock.

A man named Sower was charged at Peterborough on March 24th, with ill-treating a Peacock belonging to the Dean. Evidence was given to the effect that defendant pulled the bird off a wall and extracted a number of its tail feathers, some of which he gave to children. He took the others away with him. The Dean of Peterborough said the feathers were 5ft. long, and spoke of the pain that would be caused by pulling them out. Defendant was fined half a guinea and 6s. costs.

A Careful Mother Bird.

Humming Birds are very shy and fleet of wing, and it is difficult to make their acquaintance. A gentleman once had a rare opportunity, however, of watching a hen Humming bird and her tiny nest, for she had built it near his room. One day a heavy shower of rain fell, and just as the first few drops began to fall Mrs. Humming Bird came flying home, seized a leaf from a neighbouring tree, and drew it over her nest so as to completely cover it; then she went back to her work amongst the flowers. The gentleman wondered why the leaf did not blow away, and he found that it was hooked to a tiny stick just inside the nest. The mother bird afterwards came and unhooked the green covering, when she found the little ones snug and dry.—Taken from "The School Magazine," and sent by Marie Smith (age 13), 90, Richmond Villas, Penkhull, Stoke-on-Trent.

*Our Jack.

I have a blackbird, which is very tame. He is a beautiful songster and can imitate a Goldfinch Canary Mule, which is hung outside my father's birdhouse. He also whistles the pigeons, and can sing the first line of "If those lips could only speak." One day my mother fancied she heard a Canary chirping "Sweet," and thinking one of them had got out of the birdhouse, went into the garden to look for it, and was surprised to hear that it was the Blackbird calling out and not a Canary. One day he got out into the open air, but returned, just as a pigeon would do.—Sent by Reginald Gouldson (age 11), 11, Harbour View, St. Budeaux, Devonport.

*A Clever Jackdaw.

Not long ago we had a Jackdaw. He was taken from a nest when quite young and was reared by hand. He used to walk about the garden in company with two bantam hens. He used to carry sticks and place them on top of an old clothes' stump and would pull the poor prize bantams all over the yard trying to persuade them to fly on to the post. One day he went walking in the fields with his two wives, but at night "Jacky" could not be found anywhere. Next day he was in company with another Jackdaw; but he stood on the wall for a minute and shouted: "Naughty Jacky," and flew away.—Sent by Katie Temple (age 12), 104, Kew Road, Birkdale, Southport.

THE RUMOURED IRREGULARITY AT YORKSHIRE UNION SHOWS.

Decision of the Y.U. Council.

A most interesting case regarding the ownership of birds had to be decided by the Yorkshire Union Council on Saturday, March 27th. Rumours had been floating about pretty thickly that certain birds had been noticed as having been shown by two different persons (one a champion exhibitor, Mr. H. Long, of Shipley, and the other, Mr. W. Sowden, of Shipley, a novice), during the latter part of the season just come to a close. The culminating point was when the facts of the case were laid bare on Saturday last. These were as follows: A certain novice exhibitor is in the running for the Yorkshire Union medals, but on the approach of Christmas the birds that are counting most of the points for him look like becoming wrecks, and unable to fulfil the wishes of the owner by helping to win the medals for which he is striving. He, knowing where there are some good ones of the same classification which the owner is not exhibiting (except at certain members' shows), hies thither with the intention of securing them if at all possible. But he finds the owner not wishful to part, on account of being in the running at the afore-mentioned members' shows for good and valuable specials.

However, after some time, a bargain is struck and a sale arranged, under certain conditions, which are, that the buyer shall have the birds at once, but that the late owner shall have them on a certain date for a certain show. Thus arose the question: "Whom do these birds belong to?" They could not, so some fanciers said, be the bona-fide property of the buyer until the conditions attaching to their purchase had been discharged, while they could not be the bona-fide property of the seller because he had been paid for them, and they had passed out of his possession, except to be returned for a stated period. However, it was held to be obvious that should such proceedings be allowed, it would open the door for fraud, and make the provision of novice and amateur classes simply a farce, and a happy hunting ground for the practice of fraudulent tactics. What would happen if such were allowed to go unheeded and unchecked? Simply that it would be impossible to tell which were novice birds and which were champion. A champion exhibitor could say to a novice: "I will sell you such and such birds at such and such a price, on condition that after a certain time you return them to me for the breeding season." Of course, it is not intended to infer that the present case was anywhere nearly as bad as this. But if allowed the system would be likely to lead to very grave abuses.

The sentences of the Council of the Yorkshire Union were that the original owner, Mr. Long, be suspended until Christmas, and that the novice, Mr. Sowden, forfeit his medal.

It is necessary, writes Mr. H. J. L. Williams, hon. secretary of the Hartlepools C.B.S., for me to have a complete change of air, as my illness has left me very weak. I intend going to Derbyshire for a few weeks. This upsets all my bird-breeding arrangements, as I intended pairing up this week-end. But I will now have to wait until I come back; so I will have to lose the first round. I intend to part with about three or four pairs that I had chosen for my own use. If there are any fanciers living about Alfreton or Riddings, in Derbyshire, I should like to pay them a visit. My address will be, c/o, Mr. Bradshaw, 304, High Street, Riddings, Derbyshire.

The benefits arising from the use of marking rings are now widely recognised by all breeders of birds, especially since the rings were brought to their present state of excellence. One of the best samples of marking rings we have seen reaches us this week from Mr. F. L. Leclair (82, Fairbridge Road, Upper Holloway, London, N.). Very light (of aluminium), and beautifully made, with no rough edges, they should meet with a wide sale amongst those who use these handy little articles to enable them to identify without trouble any bird they may have bred. Two kinds are made, one with a small flange, and one without, the former being particularly easy to adjust on the bird's leg.

YORKSHIRE UNION OF C.B.S.

Meeting held on March 27th, at headquarters, Market Tavern, Goodwin Street, Bradford. Mr. R. Halliday occupied the chair. Minutes of previous meeting were passed as read. The balance-sheet showing a profit on the year's working of £16 13s. 7d., and a total balance in hand of £26 17s. 7½d., was unanimously adopted. Messrs. Armstrong and Holroyd, the auditors, gave their report on balance-sheet, which was quite satisfactory. The rumoured irregularity was dealt with; one party loses novice medal, the other being suspended until Christmas. The meeting was then adjourned.—S. DEAN, secretary.

CINNAMON MARKED YORKSHIRE C.C.

The Coming General Meeting.

Committee meeting held February 26th, at Bradford, Mr. W. Gledhill (president), in the chair. Owing to the unavoidable absence of the acting secretary, the proceedings were brief. It was decided that the general meeting be held on March 20th, but as the year does not terminate until March 31st, it has been postponed to a later date, of which due notice will be given. There will be a lot of business to transact, which will require much consideration, and it behoves every member to carefully study the rules so that each item may be treated as intelligently and expediently as possible for the benefit of the club and of the Fancy at large. No. 5 rule reads: "Members who cannot attend, having business to bring before the general meeting, may do so by writing to the secretary three days previous to the meeting taking place." It is to be hoped that full advantage will be taken of this rule so that any controversial questions can be placed upon the agenda and thoroughly thrashed out. Already a suggestion has been made that the subscription (now 1s. 6d. per member) be raised, many being of the opinion that the present amount is too small. It is a question to which there will certainly be two sides. The club has been very successful under the old fee, and was never in a more flourishing condition than at present, and whether it will be advisable to make a change it is for the members to decide. Another serious question is the classification. Anyone who was present at last year's meeting will remember how difficult it was to settle on this, and it is to be hoped that we shall be able to arrange it to the satisfaction of all. Already alternative schemes have been suggested. Then again, we have the question of separate novice classes. At present we do not cater for the novice except in competition with the champions (and in this respect they are splendidly treated), and it will be a serious matter to arrange a scheme to meet the case. With respect to the allotment of patronage. It is suggested in several quarters that a certain number be given outside Yorkshire to extend and popularise this variety on new grounds. A decision will have to be given on this point. The above are just a few of the most serious questions, and it is to be hoped others will be suggested as early as possible, so that due notice of same can be given to enable members to form an opinion. Other business will be the presentation of the balance-sheet, election of officers, etc. A number of subscriptions for last year are still outstanding, and it is hoped same will be forwarded at once. Any intending new members will be supplied with full information on application to me.—H. H. TOWERS, hon. acting secretary, Heaton View, Cragg Road, Windhill, Shipley.

CANARY QUERIES.

Breed for Beginners.

W. G. Lewis.—As you require a breed specially for singing, Rollers would certainly be the best breed to begin with, as they are quite hardy, and easily managed, and far and away the best singing breed we have. Failing pure Rollers, a cross with a Roller cock and either a Yorkshire or Norwich hen would be best, as this would give you a nice singing bird, and a much better looking type. For pure Rollers, you should get a fairly good type of bird for about 20s. to 25s. a pair. For cross-breds you could get a Roller cock for 15s.—more or less, as you choose, according to quality of its song, and a hen at from 3s. to 5s. suitable to mate with him. Probably you would be quite safe in dealing with any of the people you name. The first and fourth on your list I have always found quite fair and businesslike.

Married in Haste.

R.S., Novice.—You put the birds together much too early, and the probability is the hen was not ready for mating. If there has been no further progress when this reply appears, I would advise you to take away the nest and material, leaving in the nest pan a piece of cuttlefish and separate the birds by a wire slide for a fortnight. During this time give the cock a half teaspoonful of egg food with a few grains of gold of pleasure seed sprinkled over it, and two small leaves of dandelion daily. Give the hen the same amount of egg food daily, which sprinkle with a few grains of inga and gold of pleasure seeds on alternate days—not both seeds together, but one each day. Give her a scrap of green food daily, and a leaf of dandelion every second day for the first week, and two leaves each day in the second week; also give the hen a pinch of Epsom salts in the water for a couple of days, when first separated. If at the end of the fortnight the hen is responding promptly to the calls of the cock, you may put them together, give fresh nesting material, and try again Of course, if the hen should have laid before this reply appears, you must let matters take their course.

Feeding Canaries.

W. E. B. Hurst.—As you are just taking up the hobby, and evidently beginning at the bottom of the ladder, you ought to get "Canary Breeding for beginners," 7d. from this office, which will give far more detailed information than it is possible to do here. As a staple diet for regular use all the year round, plain Canary only is by far the best. In addition to this give a little hemp and summer rape separately, each twice a week, and on different days, increasing the supply of rape and hemp when there are young of fair size to be reared. A little egg food once a week at ordinary times, and daily when young are being reared, and during the moult if you are colour-feeding. All other seeds, maw, linseed, inga, gold of pleasure, etc., come more into the category of titbits to be given on special occasions, which you will see advised frequently in this column, or in the handbook mentioned. Green food also you will see frequently advised about in this column, and you will be able to gather much information about feeding from other pages of this paper.

Pairing Without Singing.

No Name.—You should hang cages side by side so that the birds can reach each other through the wire, and see if the cock feeds the hen freely. Also give him a leaf or two of dandelion daily, and add a sprinkling of gold of pleasure seed to the egg food. If he commences feeding the hen at once, and the latter is very keen on mating, I think you might certainly take the risk of mating them. By the way, have you paid particular attention to the bird's eyes, as this silence, coupled with apparent good health and condition, is a little ominous, and I should not be surprised if you discover that the bird is either partially or totally blind. In that case successful breeding will be reduced to a mere gamble. Taken all round, they are not quite so easy to breed as other varieties, and you ought to mate up a pair of hardy common Canaries at the same time as the Crests, to act as foster parents to the young, if required. When breeding with valuable Crests, it is best to be on the safe side, and one, or even two, pairs of common feeders for foster parents to each pair of Crests is not a bad speculation. To trim them for breeding, if the Crest is long and covering the eyes, snip off the sides so that the bird's eyes are quite unobstructed by plumage, and snip off the loose ends of any dangling or flowing feathers about the flanks, lower parts of abdomen, and under tail coverts. It is not at all necessary to disfigure the birds—all you need do is trim off loose and dangling ends of feathers that give the birds a rough and coarse appearance.

Hung in Moult.

J.H.B.—You say you feed the bird on plain Canary, with the stimulants, yet you mention none of the latter at all, unless you consider bread and milk to be so described. Try following for a month: For the first fortnight give plain Canary only as a staple, and twice each week a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of port wine and two of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it. Every day give a spray of groundsel, chickweed, or other green food. In the drinking water give six drops each of dandelion juice and syrup of rhubarb, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence two days in three for the first week, and every second day in the second week. During the second week, give also four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid on the alternating days between the other mixture. In the third and fourth weeks, add half a teaspoonful of summer rape to the diet three times a week, a few grains of inga on two other days, and again on two other days give half a teaspoonful of sponge cake or egg food without any admixture; and in the water give twenty drops of port wine, and two each of tincture of gentian and tincture of steel every second day. Of course, you will discontinue the sponge cake for the first fortnight in the last two weeks. See the bird is not exposed to any draught, and keep cage strewn with clean, gritty sand.

Various.

Ernie.—Glad to hear you have succeeded so well, so far, in spite of the terrible weather. The birds certainly did very well in getting to work, but still, it is by no means a record performance. This success, however, should convince you of the wisdom of keeping the birds until in good, fresh condition before putting them together. The young will be pure Rollers, and the colour, as you will probably be able to see before this reply appears, will be clear, and more or less lightly variegated, with, perhaps, a heavily variegated now and then. The length of time a hen can remain off her eggs without doing them harm naturally depends upon the condition of weather prevailing at the time, and also upon the stage of incubation reached. But even if a hen allowed the eggs to become cold to the touch, I should not discard them until the full time had expired. One meets with many little surprises in this line. Do not believe the ignorant assertions of silly faddists about sweet, tasteless pepper burning the "inside" of a bird. At the same time, you should know that it is quite useless to be giving colour food now. You can only colour-feed a bird whilst it is moulting, and the new plumage being reproduced.

Roller with Asthma.

P. J. Kavanagh.—You do not say how or where the bird is kept, but I suspect it is, or has been, either exposed to draughts or to great variations of temperature. You must first see that these things are totally avoided in future, and keep in just a comfortable, not over-heated, temperature. Feed on a mixture of two parts Canary to one part summer rape, as a staple diet, and give in addition a few grains of hemp twice a week, and every second day for the next two or three weeks, half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with two drops of sherry and one of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it. The bird will probably eat this freely if you adhere to the quantities named, but if it does not, sprinkle it with a few grains of maw or gold of pleasure seed. Give a scrap of green food each day when you are not giving the sponge cake. In the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and twelve drops of glycerine for three consecutive days. After this give twenty drops of whisky, six each of oxymel of squills and tincture of tolu, and two of eucalyptus oil two days in every three for a week, and every second day afterwards until the wheezing ceases. Do not by any means breed with this bird unless it should make a speedy and thorough recovery; which, candidly, I rather doubt. Well shake the mixture before putting drinker on cage.

From Head to Foot.

A.Y.—Your diet is not sufficiently nourishing for the bird, which is doubtless in a very low condition. In addition to the staple of plain Canary, give half a teaspoonful of summer rape three times a week, half a teaspoonful of egg food or crushed sponge cake, with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it, on two other days, and on two different days a few grains only of a mixture of equal parts of hemp, inga, maw, and linseed. Give a small scrap of chickweed or tender groundsel top daily; keep cage clean perfectly free from redmite, and give gritty sand regularly. When the weather gets milder, allow it to bathe freely, and slightly anoint bare patch on head with carbolised vaseline once or twice a week for a month, being careful not to soil the surrounding feathers. The new feathers may not be reproduced until next moulting season. Bathe the foot for a few minutes in a fairly warm solution of boracic acid—a small teaspoonful of acid to a saucer of warm water—then dry, and gently anoint with cold cream. It may, perhaps, have got something into the foot, or hurt it in the wire or perch ends. Look carefully when the foot is bathed quite clean for any signs of such injury. A crystal of sulphate of soda the size of a small pea in the water for a day or two would help it.

Powder Ineffectual.

Mrs. A. Sinkirs.—You have only discovered now what I have frequently stated for years—that insect powder is practically useless as an "exterminator" of redmites. You ought to have thoroughly ridded your cage and the place where it stands or hangs of the pest before the birds began nesting. As matters are, I am afraid the hen, and the young, if any are hatched, will have a poor time of it, as the mites are almost certain to harbour in the nest. To make the very best of matters now, thoroughly pepper the nest with freshly-ground pyrethrum powder, or the powder you have been using, and "teaze" it down amongst the nesting material, so as to form a layer around the inner side and bottom of the pan or box. This will act as a deterrent to the mites forming a harbour, but you must still keep an eye on the nest, and if it gets infested when the hen is sitting, or has young, make a new one, and burn the old one altogether. Paint the back and bottom of the box or pan on the outside occasionally with fir tree oil essence of quassia, or strong spirit of camphor. Also touch over all the joints of doors, corners, perch ends, and any place likely to form a harbour with either of these substances, and add a few drops of the quassia essence to the bathing water two or three times a week. If you persistently follow these directions you will probably be able to keep the pest within bounds until the breeding season is over, and you can deal with it more thoroughly. As long as the cage is of fair size, and not exposed to draughts, the fact of its not being a proper breeding cage does not matter at all. Glad to hear the other bird is better.

Panting and Wheezing.

J. Bowen.—You do not say how old these hens are, and if they have left their youth any distance in the rear I am afraid you will not be able to do much for them. The probability is that either draught or a great variation of heat in the kitchen is responsible. Try following treatment:—See that draughts and fluctuations are avoided as fully as possible, and that cages are free from red mite, and give solid perches instead of the unstable spring tops. Feed on three parts canary to one part summer rape; give separately, a small pinch only of inga twice a week, and on two other days half-a-teaspoonful per bird of crushed sponge cake with two drops of port wine and one of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it. On each of the other days give a spray of green food. In the drinking water give six drops each of dandelion juice and syrup of rhubarb two days in three for a week, and after that twenty drops of whisky, six each of oxymel of squills and tincture of lobelia, and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week, or a fortnight if it appears necessary.

Canary Querists should send to our publisher for "Canary Breeding for Beginners," 7d.; "House's Canary Manual," 1/2; and "Yorkshire Canaries," 1/-, post free.

Hot-tempered Yorkie.

J. J. B.—Perhaps you attach too much importance to the apparent violence of the bird's temper. It is rare that any damage is done by a little scrapping when an ardent young cock is first allowed access to a mate. Such a pair frequently settle down to serious business quite early. Still, if you think you cannot trust him, try him with a healthy, vigorous hen over a year old, and keep the wire slide between them until they seem on the best of terms and the cock feeds the hen freely through the wires. Then let him run with her for a couple of hours, and if you still fear for the hen's well-being shut him off with the wire slide again, and let him run with her for an hour or two morning and evening. In a day or two he may have worked off his surplus energy, but, if not, continue the same tactics until the eggs are laid, and then shut him off altogether, and leave the hen to hatch and rear by herself. With a cock of this temperament the eggs will undoubtedly be quite fertile under the management advised.

Building on Floor of Cage.

J. H. Lideard.—When a hen gets a "kink" in her head like unto this and will go "contrairey," one may just as well look on, and let her, like Mrs. Gummidge, go her own way. You might see that your nest pan is fixed firmly, and does not rock and wobble about; also that it is fairly private, and in an easily get-at-able position for the birds by the time she is going to nest again, as I expect it would be too late to do anything at all this time. Should she again want to start nesting on the floor, and you have seen to the above point about the nest pan, covering the cage front just before the nest pan if necessary in order to assure its privacy, put the nest pan on the floor in the chosen spot, and then if she elects to build in it, wait until she has been sitting steadily a few days, and then try raising it a very little each day, until you can hang it in its proper position. She may allow herself to be moved in this fashion. But if she appears to resent the first interference, leave her alone, and make the best of the circumstances. The young will be simply cross-breds, but under a good German tutor should make very nice singers.

Various.

F. Leng.—(1) You give me no idea at all whether this query refere to breeding show or song cages. If either of the two latter, they naturally vary in size, as a cage suitable for a Border or German would make a sorry place for a Lancashire, and a Hawfinch would cut a sorry figure in a cage that would be all that could be desired for a Redpoll. You had better get one of the large dealers' catalogues and then you will see the regulation sizes for all cages; but when space is no consideration, the larger you have any kind of cage, within reason, the better. (2) If you refer to breeding cages, the regulation size, about twenty inches long, does very well for Yorkshires. A little extra height is far more important than extra length for this breed, as any self-respecting Yorkshire has no business to stand across his perches at such an angle that his tail rubs the side of cage. (3) You may quite safely use zinc drinkers as long as you give only pure water in them. But you must not add any drugs or medicines to the water in these drinkers at any time, as drugs are apt to set up chemical action on the zinc, and make the water poisonous. (4) Yes, it is quite safe to boil these zinc drinkers, and this is an excellent method of cleansing and disinfecting them. (5) You may give the birds apple instead of green food when the latter is not available, or is unsuitable for use, but use good wholesome green food in preference when available.

The First Egg.

Perplexed.—Assuming that the hen is in nice fresh condition, as well as the cock, at the time the pair is run together, you may reasonably expect the first egg to appear within a fortnight. But there are so many things which may crop up that it is not possible to lay down a hard and fast rule to be applied to all cases, and, therefore, no definite number of days is named in the book for the first egg to be looked for. It is no unusual thing for a very keen and fresh pair to build a nest and lay the first egg in less than a week after being put together, but the most general rule is to find it produced somewhere between the seventh and fourteenth day, when both birds were in good condition at time of putting them together. Your hen was probably not egg bound, but as you did not interfere beyond simply steaming and putting a drop of oil on the vent, this could only do good in the circumstances. Perhaps you had given a free treat of green dandelion after a prolonged fast from it, in which case I should say at once this was the sole cause of the symptoms. Do not give this greenstuff at all to this hen. Use tender heads of groundsel, chickweed, or lettuce or watercress. Twenty drops each of whiskey and glycerine in the water for a day or two, and a pinch of inga every second day until the eggs are laid would do good. See if there are any wire or other obstacles against which the cock has to rub his head when getting seeds, egg, or water. It is just possible the hen might have plucked the feathers out, but rubbing is the most likely cause. Slightly anoint the bare place with vaseline.

Brevities.

Yorkshire Gone Soft (J.W.M.).—Feed on the ordinary diet frequently advised here, and give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of sherry and one of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it three times a week for a fortnight. In the drinking water give twenty drops of the following mixture every second day for a fortnight. Mixture: Dissolve a pennyworth of citrate of iron and quinine in two tablespoonfuls of port wine, and use as directed above. See the bird is quite free from draughts and chills. It should breed all right this season, but do not attempt to mate it now until the second week in April, unless it braces up very quickly.

Quassia and Aconite (B.A.C.).—(1) About thirty drops of concentrated infusion should be sufficient. As the strength of the infusion may vary, however, be guided by the instructions you should get when purchasing; (2) You could give five drops of the tincture of aconite every second day, or two days in three, for a fortnight, or ten drops every second day for a week, quite safely, in an ordinary drinker containing not less than two tablespoonfuls of water. The latter is about the average capacity of ordinary drinkers. You are quite right in thinking this drug should be used with caution. My advice to you is to leave it severely alone except under circumstances when its use is indicated, and less risky things have failed.

Caged or Flying Loose (J.P.A.).—As your room is plenty large enough for you to keep a very nice stock of birds in cages, I should certainly advise you to adopt this method in preference to allowing the birds to fly loose and breed indiscriminately. In the latter case you can have, at best, but very little control over the type of markings of the birds you breed; whereas you could breed, within certain limits, almost any type you desired in cages. As regards the breed you should keep, if you have not yet had any experience in breeding Canaries, by all means start with a hardy breed, such as Borders, Norwich, or Yorkshire.

Wheezy Yorkshires (Scarlet Lancer).—Most likely the birds' conditions are due to fluctuations of heat in the kitchen. They will undoubtedly do better in the new room, provided you see there is no possibility of their being exposed to draughts or damp. See reply to "P. J. Kavanagh," and treat as there advised, except that you should use three parts Canary to one part rape, as your staple seed diet. You may, if you prefer, use the egg food instead of the sponge cake by mixing the other things in it. The initial dose of Epsom salts you need give for only one day. Your birds should recover quite well enough for breeding. Glad to hear the advice given last season was successful.

Deformed Toe (F. Atkinson).—You ought to have attended to the toe as soon as the bird left the nest, or even before if you saw the deformity. Cut a sixteenth of an inch off a feeding bottle tube, catch the bird, and hold it with its three front claws close together, and the hind claw lying back against the shank of leg. Now pass the small rubber ring over the front claws, and up the leg to the end of hind claw, but not past it, and leave it there, so that when the bird is released the ring will prevent the hind claw returning under the foot. Give it also small, round perches about as thick as a lead pencil, for a few weeks, until you see that the claw retains its proper position after the rubber ring is cut off, which may be in three or four weeks. You will find an assistant very useful to hold the bird whilst you put on the ring, or vice versa.

Cause of Death (Puzzled, West Gorton).—There can be no doubt the first hen died from egg-binding, and the same would apply to the second hen, if, as I presume, she was very ill when you began to treat as you say for egg-binding. If she did not show any signs of distress at that time, it is just possible she had only deferred the deposition of the second egg for a few hours, or perhaps until next day, though this would be hardly likely on account of the egg being fully shelled. The cause of the egg-binding I cannot guess without some data to go upon; perhaps it was due to a sudden snap of cold weather affecting them; or it may have been through a chill caught in too vigorous bathing, or many other things. What green food have you been giving, if any? See another reply on this point. You should give your hens now a pinch of inga every second day from the time they are mated until eggs are all laid.

What Mixture? (T. X.).—In reply to your query as to what birds mix well in an aviary, I think you might well commit this axiom to memory as a general guide: Seed-eaters with seed-eaters, softbills with softbills, weak with the weak, and the strong with the strong. It is only in fair-sized aviaries that the mixing up of any class should be attempted. If the aviary is of anything like a fair size, I have no doubt whatever but that the Canaries would make efforts to breed in such a collection as you name, but whether their attempts would be brought to any successful issue is quite another matter, which only experience can decide. The chances are more against it than in its favour.

A Feather Eater (no nom-de-plume).—In addition to your present diet, give the hen a small piece of green food daily—either chickweed or the tender young tops of groundsel if procurable, and give a mealworm each day for a time. Reduce the quantity of inga given by one-half, still giving it twice a week. In the drinking water give six drops of dandelion juice, as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and the same quantity of chlorate of potash every second day for a week, and during the following week two drops each of tincture of steel and tincture of gentian every second day.

A Correction.—I regret that a printer's error in a reply to a correspondent on March 20th escaped my notice until too late to rectify the matter last week. In reply to "A. Locke," I am made to say a simple inhalation of "benzine," with "tincture of benzine" as an ingredient, might do good. What I wrote was "benzoin" and "tincture of benzoin." I can only hope that the error was too obvious to prevent the subject being treated to a dose of benzine, which is a very different thing.

A Suitable Mate (Torpedo).—From your description I see no reason to doubt that your bird is a pure Yorkshire, and as it is in such good song, and is consequently vigorous and healthy, there is no reason why he should not be worth breeding with. It is probably a Cinnamon-marked bird, but I cannot discover whether it is a yellow or a buff. If the former, the yellow colour of the feathers should run right to the end of the web, but if a buff, there will be white tips to the web of the feather, especially on the neck, breast, back, and shoulders, giving it more or less the appearance of being dusted over with white powder on the yellow part. If you find it is a yellow, mate it with a clear, pink-eyed buff hen, to breed Cinnamon ticks and marks; if a buff, mate it with a clear, pink-eyed yellow hen.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Linnet Ailing.

A.D.C.—There cannot be much ailing the Linnet, or he would not sing at all. I advise you to give for three or four days (until you see the bowels are moving freely) a good half-teaspoonful of dandelion juice (taraxacum, from the chemists) in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water. There is certainly no object in cleaning out the bird's cage every day; twice a week is ample for every purpose. I am quite sure that it is possible to upset a bird by an excess of—shall we say, "fussiness? Feed and water every day, of course, and scrape, or wash, his perches once a week. You would do better, I think, to let him have the mixture I myself advise for Linnets (any good seedsman would put it up for you). I dealt very fully with their feeding a week or so ago. The mixture you name would make an admirable change of food given now and again. Let him have a small teaspoonful of maw seed daily for a time. If kept in a warmed room, you certainly must not hang him outside on very cold days; that is a very dangerous practice.

Pink-eyed Hens & Muling Finches

Constant Reader.—The pink-eye is the hall-mark of Cinnamon blood, and serves to show that this is in the bird, even though its plumage contains no feathers with markings on them of a cinnamon tone of colour. This "pink" tinge of the eye is usually very perceptible in young birds, but very often becomes less and less perceptible as the bird ages, until it is very difficult, and often impossible, to detect at all. If the bird is a cock, however, the cinnamon characteristic, and probably feather marking, are sure to come out in the young. A ticked, or very lightly-marked bird is just as likely to throw light Mules as a clear bird, especially if from a clear-bred strain; so if you purchase birds showing distinct cinnamon feathers, then you can be sure they are at least from a pink-eyed strain. Whether they are also "Sib-bred," no man but the actual breeder can tell; therefore, you can only take the seller's word. You seem to have got hold of a Goldie, which declines to fill eggs in captivity; such are not by any means rare. I suppose you feed him up as recommended by me, and give plenty of dandelion daily. If he won't fill eggs when in full song, and apparently fine fettle, then you can't do more to make him. As he is so good a bird, you should certainly give him another chance this year. It is certainly not too early for Goldies to be in breeding form. I have had two or three in rank condition, with quite clear beaks, for a week or two now.

About Bramblefinches.

Bramble.—My word, you must have some monsters if your Bramblefinches are as big as Hawfinches! The birds with the solid, deep black heads are old, fully adult birds, probably in their third season. The younger birds have the head feathers edged with brown. There is a seasonal change of plumage, however; that is to say, in the summer, when in breeding plumage, the cock birds have the head a deeper and more solid black than when in winter plumage, in which they are paler and dingier in colour generally, and with the brown edgings to the feathers of the head and upper back very pronounced. As they come into nuptial garb, these brown edgings wear off (it is said); anyway, they disappear. As the show season is in the autumn and winter, the exhibition Bramble has usually a "laced" head; one with a glossy jet-black ground colour, regularly but not over-heavily spangled is the ideal. The hood requires to be cut cleanly under the beak, leaving the centre of the throat free from black, the hood finishing in sharp, well-defined (not ragged) lines on either side. The wing markings require to be very distinct (the colours not confused, or merged into one another, with a wide, rich brown bar across the shoulder. As you know, the bird wants to be as rich in colour as possible, and as big as possible, consistent with a graceful carriage, with a wide chest and bold head.

A Quartette.

R.G.F.E.—1, It is advisable to let the Goldie get acquainted with his Canary wife, certainly. If the Finch is singing stoutly, and especially if his beak is almost clear, you might let them go ahead nesting if they show signs of desiring to do so. 2, I don't think I have ever met with a case of a Goldfinch deliberately eating feathers (and not his own), "gobbling them up," as you put it. Let him have some cuttlefish to chew up, and a few sunflower seeds to try his beak on, or a sprig of nesting material. Some of my own Finches are very fond of "chewing up," or pulling to pieces, their perches. I presume they find exercise and amusement in the practice, and I never interfere—that which pleases them, pleases me, as a rule; and perches are cheap. 3, Of course, keeping a bird in a large aviary could not be expected to steady it. I should advise you to put the bird in a moderate-sized Finch stock cage (16 by 11 by 8), and hang the latter in a place where there are people constantly about. You will have to leave it largely to time. 4, I have had fresh-caught Linnets get steady in a week—in fact, they were never really wild. It is a matter of disposition; birds vary remarkably, and each individual has to be considered by itself. I often use "back cages"; not the usual small size, but those a few inches larger each way.

Concerning Mules.

New Reader.—1, I hope you will have good fortune with your Mules. They are very hardy, as a rule. The feeding of all the Canary crosses is carried out on very similar lines. All require a little "richer" seed diet than that usually given a Canary. A good seed mixture at this season of the year is:—Canary three parts, teazle two parts, hemp one part, charlock and summer rape half-part each, maw and linseed quarter-part each. In the hot weather reduce the hemp and linseed. Stop them altogether, as a regular thing, during the height of summer, and begin again with them when the moult is nicely advanced. Any of the special Finch or wild-seed mixtures advertised in our columns will make a good and acceptable change, given twice or so a week. A little sunflower seed twice or thrice a week would also be sure to be appreciated; crack it if necessary. Any of the usual green foods may be given—flowering groundsel (not coarse leaves), chickweed, shepherd's purse, dandelion, lettuce, watercress, etc. The second and third may be given practically ad libitum. All Mules are very fond of shepherd's purse and chickweed. 2 For a window cage, the best is the "waggon-shaped" cage, made of tinned wire, and not less than 12 inches long (14 or 16 would be very much better). You will find them illustrated in the catalogues of all good cage-makers. We are not allowed to recommend any particular maker; it is against the rules. They would be fitted with glass round the bottom, to prevent scattering of seed-husks. 3, From wherever you get the cages, you will be able to buy suitable baths (of tin) to hang on the cage doors. A bath can be given daily in the warm weather; twice a week in winter (oftener, if kept in a warmed room). 4, The birds will keep in good health treated on the above lines, and insects are not likely to trouble you. Should they do so, then write for advice. Keep a piece of cuttlefish between the cage wires.

In an Aviary.

W. H. Wagg.—Your aviary is a curious shape. But its worst fault, in my opinion, is the lack of depth from front to back. Two ft. is very narrow, and affords very little privacy for the birds, or, for the matter of that, shelter from the wind, the rain, the sun, and the cats. The slope of the roof, too, is the wrong way; a good slope from back to front affords appreciated shelter under the eave. Candidly, I am afraid your place is too open, and in other ways hardly suitable for British birds to breed in it. Further, the successful breeding of British birds, when there are a lot together in a small place, is very doubtful, indeed. The reasons for this I have often given in this column (quite recently, so that as you are a constant reader you will probably have read them). Your three cock Chaffinches will only fight. You should leave one in only with the hen. You must, on no account, have the sexes unequal. Other pairs you could have would be Bullfinch, Goldfinch, Siskin, Linnet, Redpoll, Twite. That would be plenty of Britishers, though a pair of Canaries (or one cock—and two hens) might be included. Hang up plenty of nest boxes in likely places.

British Bird Querists should purchase our "British Bird Manual," published in two parts, "Hardbills" and "Softbills," price 1/- each, or in cloth cover together, 2/3 post free.

Hand-rearing a Thrush.

A.M.—It is nonsense to say that nestling Thrushes require feeding but three times a day. You won't rear many if you follow that advice. My own nestlings I always keep in a ventilated, but cosy, basket, and throw a piece of flannel over them at night; they require, of course, to be kept warm. I bring away the nest, when possible; but this is not a thing that matters. Here is my method of hand-feeding; I hope other readers likely to want the information will cut the reply out and keep it by them. Blackbirds and Thrushes are very easy to rear from the nest, and many people do so on nothing but bread and milk. Equal parts of stale bread and best ants' eggs (freed from rubbish), made very moist with new milk, would be a very fair food. To rear strong, lusty youngsters, however, I prefer to proceed as follows:—Boil a fresh egg twelve minutes, and, when cold, well mix with a fork the yolk and half of the white into two crushed Osborne biscuits; add to this a small tablespoonful of best ants' eggs (removing bits of stick and rubbish, if present), stirring all well together. Just before you feed, take the necessary portion of food and make it into a sloppy consistency with new milk. In hot weather (and at all times) be careful the food is always fresh and sweet. Feed a little at a time only, but very often, from dawn to dusk; and a feed after dark is not at all a bad thing. Cut a few mealworms into pieces, also, dip them into milk, and drop them into the nestlings' mouths. As the youngsters grow, too, add now and then a pinch of small but gritty sand to the food. It seems to act as a preventative of looseness of the bowels (or diarrhœa). Give also at all times flies and like small insects; and live ants' eggs if you can get them. Young birds want feeding once an hour (do not "stuff" them at any time) at first; every two hours or so at later stages. Cease band-feeding when they cease to "cry" to be fed, and are picking up food for themselves. Keep warm, cosy, and scrupulously clean. No special appliance is necessary for the feeding. I have used a large, blunted (with a penknife) match stick with every success; likewise a quill tooth-pick with all sharp corners removed. The handiest implement I ever possessed, however, was a little bone mustard spoon, which I cut to a suitable shape and different sizes at each end (handle and bowl), and smoothed off with very fine glass-paper. Different fanciers have different ideas though. Put the food well down at the back of the tongue, and always be careful not to bruise or lacerate the tender mouths of the nestlings.

Brevities.

A Mule Breeding (Beginner).—It is only the usual behaviour. As I have often stated, I have had both cock Mules and Hybrids behave exactly as do cock Canaries, and many times had hen Mules build, lay, and sit just like hen Canaries; but only clear eggs resulted in both cases. Still, I fancy there have been cases where Mules have successfully bred; the evidence points that way. You must decide for yourself whether you part the cock Mule and hen Canary which you have together. If no one tries, however, no one is likely to succeed. If you have a taste for experimentation, why, go ahead.

Hardbills (F.C.M.).—I tell you candidly that I think a small place such as yours is more fitted for a collection of small Foreign birds than it is for British Finches. It is not so large as some of my own cages. Still, half-a-dozen Finches might do very well in it—say, cock Goldfinch, Bullfinch, Linnet, Twite, Redpoll, and Siskin. Possibly a Chaffinch or Greenfinch might be included; if they turned spiteful, however, they would have to be removed.

Thrushes in a Cage (J. Statham).—If going to breed Thrushes in a cage myself, I should prefer to hang the cage in a quiet room rather than outside on the wall. The four-foot cage you have (if of a good depth) ought to hold them fairly well, but should be all covered in except the front. Give them an old nest. Obtain a disused one from some hedgerow; there will be plenty in a few weeks' time. In our last Birthday Number there was a photograph of Thrushes which had bred in a cage, and an account of their doings written by the owner. Did you read it? Fourteen days is the average time of incubation, but it varies somewhat, according to the weather.

Skylark Not Singing (T.X.).—Your query is not one that I can well answer without seeing the bird. Are you sure it is in good health? Change of cage, change of situation, and change of food will usually throw a bought bird off song for a time. If your bird was only a newly-caught, or newly-caged one, then you could hardly expect him to be singing yet. Again, it might be (perish the thought!) a hen. As I say above, your question is very hard to answer.

A Pair of Goldies (Beginner, A.M.).—You can let the two Goldfinches run together at once; they cannot, as you put it, "commence to breed before they are ready." Fanciers keep hen Canaries away from the cock Goldies because these are apt to want to nest before the Finches are fit. This is unlikely to happen in the case of a pair of Goldfinches. The hen is a little nervous of you yet, I should think; or, if she is very steady, she wants to "fight" you—a way very tame Goldies have.

Weed Seeds (H.A.M.).—There is no "best time" to gather dandelion, thistle, and hardhead seed; one has to take it whenever one can get it. Dandelion seed is ripe during the spring, and thistle and hardhead seeds during summer and early autumn. I always look for the plants in likely spots in the fields and lanes, and take the seeding heads from time to time, as they ripen; the season lasts over several weeks. The best heads are those gathered just when they are on the point of opening to let loose the winged seeds. For very early dandelion, railway embankments, and the like, which face south are ideal spots to search.

Three Items (A.H.D.).—You must be exceedingly lucky not to have had a red-mite for three years. Should you know one if you met one? I get them myself, despite scrupulous cleanliness. You should try anointing the place very gently once or twice daily with a little sulphur ointment. If the cock Linnet's beak has not turned a deep (blackish) blue, he is not in full breeding condition, and this would account for his behaviour. Personally, I should not use the food you name unless I added hard-boiled, minced egg to it.

FOREIGN BIRDS

Answered by Wesley T. Page, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

A Grey in Poor Condition.

H. S.—A Grey Parrot should be fed on seed mixture (see reply to "J. W. Sds."). Ripe fruit, nuts, plain biscuit, with a piece of clean cuttlefish always hanging in cage, and grit; water should either be kept in cage, or the bird permitted to quench its thirst two or three times a day. Give it several doses of Dinneford's magnesia, with three days between each dose; for directions see other replies. When not giving the magnesia make the drinking water the colour of pale port wine with Parrish's chemical food, and continue this till the bird's plumage is improved. Lightly spray it on genial days with quassia solution. The treatment must be persevered with, as recovery of condition will not be rapid. Note: Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food.

Birds for an Outdoor Aviary.

M. R.—Providing they were not overcrowded, I have never known Cockatiels harm even the smallest Waxbill. Some individuals among Saffron Finches are rather pugnacious, but I do not think you will have any trouble if you keep your birds down to the same number that there are square feet in the floor area of your aviary. Thus an aviary 10ft. by 6ft. would accommodate 60 birds. But for successful breeding purposes 12 pairs would be sufficient, as you must leave some accommodation for young birds. You could keep with the birds you name Zebra and Ribbon Finches, Long and Rufous-tailed Grassfinches, Zebra Waxbills, Magpie and Bronze Mannikins, Grey Singing Finches, and Bengalese, which would be a good selection to start with; but unless you can procure them from some outdoor aviary, do not turn them out till May. You would find my booklet, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," very helpful, 1s. 1d. post free from this office.

Parrot Not Talking.

A. W.—I can add very little to my previous reply. Diet bird as advised regularly in this column, and give it a little glycerine every other day in its drinking water for a week—8 drops of glycerine to the ounce of water. For a month I should give it one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia in its drinking water (one ounce) once a week, and if there is any sign of weakness when you cease giving the glycerine, well colour the drinking water daily with Parrish's chemical food, and continue this for a month at least. After a serious illness some Parrots take quite a considerable time before commencing to talk again, but unless the illness has permanently affected the vocal organs, undoubtedly the bird will talk again. Making a fuss of it, petting it, etc., but not so as to worry or plague it, may expedite matters.

A Cockatoo in Poor Plumage.

J. O'Hara.—Am afraid not much more can be done for the bird; it will possibly outgrow the defective beak. You must continue the chemical food. I fear the trouble is constitutional, but as the bird is evidently fairly well, apart from its miserable appearance, it is worth trying to improve matters. Continue the seeds; also give it such ripe fruit as it will take, together with nuts, plain biscuits, and, say, a teaspoonful of boiled maize daily; boil the maize till soft, drain off surplus water, and stir in half-a-teaspoonful of flowers of sulphur, but have the grains as whole as possible. Note: The boiled maize only keeps fresh one day, and the food vessel must be kept strictly clean. I do not remember all the details of my previous reply, but in such cases recovery is very slow. The bird's bowels should be kept freely moving, but there should be no signs of diarrhœa. An occasional dose of Dinneford's magnesia (see other replies) will soon regulate this. A light spraying with tepid water will also be beneficial, but till weather is warmer this should only be done on sunny days, and draught carefully guarded against till it is dry.

Pekin Robins.

"Brockley Jack" and "Pekout."—This species can be kept in almost any company, its one depravity being a fondness for eggs for breakfast, and in search of same it visits the nests of its fellow captives. A cage 12 by 10 by 8 is none too large for so active a bird, but if you can let it have a fly round occasionally it will do fairly well therein. I should advise a box cage 24 by 15 by 12 as a minimum; a true pair would be worth about 10s. 6d., and the temperature of any ordinary living room is ample. Diet: A good soft food for these birds can be made as under:—Game meal (ground Osborne biscuit will answer as well), ants' eggs, and dried flies in equal parts; well mix and make crumbly moist for use; ripe fruit daily, and one or two mealworms per bird; also any small beetles, smooth caterpillars, flies, and spiders you can capture for it. The bird is hardy, and will live out-of-doors all the year round in any aviary giving room for exercise. I don't approve of sawdust for cage bottoms; it gets in the fruit, food, etc., and does harm. Use plenty of sand, with a sprinkling of grit on top, and with a daily clean the cage should not be offensive.

An Ailing Budgerigar.

C. R. G.—See advertisement in this column re booklet, "Budgerigars and Cockatiels"; you would find this very helpful. Budgerigars are not large drinkers, so it is rather difficult to administer drugs in the water. For one day make the drinking water just saline with Epsom salts, and repeat this after an interval of three days; in between, and continue till they are in good plumage, put Parrish's chemical food in the drinking water—1 part chemical food to 6 parts of water. Diet: Canary and white millet in equal parts; also a few oats and an occasional millet spray as a change. A leaf of lettuce as green food and a little ripe apple should also be given, and when you can get it free from frost, supply as much grass in flower (grass in the ear) as they will eat. Clean cuttlefish should be continually in the cage, also grit, and a dry crust of stale household bread will do no harm if they care for it. I really cannot say whether it is indigestion or pneumonia from your details; I take it to be the former, and have advised accordingly. If it is the latter, no treatment can save it. I am assuming the birds are kept out of draught; even hardy Budgerigars will not survive draught long.

Foreign Bird Querists will find in our handbook, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1, and "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," 6d. post free; a mine of information of use and interest.

An Indoor Aviary.

F. F.—(1) I fear you are attempting too much in the space at your command, and in such quarters it is very unwise to keep two pairs of the same species together. Put the Parson Finches and one pair of the Bichenos each into a large box-cage, and they will probably breed; leave the others all together, and if you put up at least double the number of nesting receptacles that you have pairs of birds, you could with safety put in, say, three pairs of Waxbills, say Zebra, Common and Green Avadavats, and if they did not breed (which they might do), they would not interfere with the others, and these beautiful and minute gems would give variety and colour to your selection. (2) I cannot say that I have noticed such a variation before; neither is it common, though with every species there is a general similarity of markings and colour areas; yet no species is without variation, and over and above this variation melanistic and albinistic specimens occasionally crop up. Very probably, however, you have a young bird, whose plumage after the next moult may be quite normal.

Budgerigars, Cockatiels, etc.

W. H. F.—You would find the booklets, "Budgerigars and Cockatiels" and "Foreign Birds for Beginners," very helpful, both obtainable from the Manager. If your poultry-house is weather-proof—that is, the walls sound and draught-proof—it will answer well, and if you cover up the front with wood and glass, leaving an aperture from ground to roof, say, 1½ft. wide, the birds should thrive and do well. It is not advisable to mix Parrakeets up too much; they breed better when they have not much company. It will certainly be advisable to divide it up into the four six-feet divisions, and to extend such a run before each as your convenience permits; 6, 8, or 10ft. as regards height will be ample; suit your own convenience and have which you choose. Into one compartment put, say, three pairs Budgerigars, one pair Cockatiels, and one pair Black-cheeked Lovebirds. Into another, pairs of Rosella and Red-rump Parrakeets; let a pair of Pennants occupy the third, and pairs of Stanley and Many-colours could occupy the fourth. You would then have a handsome and showy series. All of these would thrive on a seed diet, with a little ripe fruit, green food, etc. You must always have at least double the number of husks or other nesting receptacles about that you have pairs of birds; also several food hoppers, thus obviating much squabbling. Use natural branches with the bark on for perches, and of varying thicknesses, say, from ½ to 2 inches in diameter. Unless you get birds from some outdoor aviary, don't put them out till May.

King Grey Parrot Ailing.

J. W. Sds.—(1) Your unwholesome diet is responsible for the bird's indisposition, and you certainly have not read your Cage Birds to profit, or you could not have continued to so feed the bird. In the first place, your diet should consist of seed mixture, as follows: 2 parts each canary, millet, and oats, and one part each hemp, dari, wheat, maize, and sunflower seeds; well mix, and keep a supply continually in cage. Also give ripe fruit, nuts, plain biscuits, and keep a clean piece of cuttlefish hanging in cage. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food whatever. As your bird has been having milk sop, you had better give it a little boiled maize daily for a time; boil it till soft, and drain away all surplus moisture. Note: This must be prepared fresh daily, and the food vessel kept strictly clean. Continue to give the chemical food, but straight away give one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia in one ounce of water, and see that it drinks this before supplying any other liquid. Of course, none must be retained till the second day. (2) "King" is merely a fancy dealer's name for those birds showing red in other parts of the body than the tail; they have no special value, though a little more is charged for them when it can be obtained. When in health and good plumage your bird would be worth from 25s. to 30s. When its vocabulary is increased, its value would be more; quite fancy prices are given for clear and good talkers.

Brevities.

Breeding Green Parrakeets (J.H.F.).—The birds require a nest box with a concave bottom, the concavity so arranged that the egg will lie naturally in the middle; of course, if you cannot arrange for this you must put about one inch of sawdust in your present box; but it makes results more uncertain. These birds will only require their usual diet, viz., seeds, ripe fruit, nuts, plain biscuit, and green food when nesting, but should have access to lime rubbish of some sort to avoid risk of becoming egg bound. They are quite hardy, and you should certainly meet with success before the season is over. Don't be inquisitive; leave them to themselves. Young Parrakeets do not leave the nest at a very early age.

A Talking Ring-neck (Enquirer—Canonbury).—This species is a fairly clear talker, though the variety of utterance is very often only a limited one. You appear to have quite a talented bird (a female), and if its stock phrases are numerous and varied, it certainly is worth 60s. to 100s., or perhaps more if you came across anyone badly wanting a good talker, in good health and plumage.

Keeping and Breeding Budgerigars (J. L. Novice).—Get "Budgerigars and Cockatiels." 6d. post free from this office; it will give you much help and many hints. In a cage 2ft. long by 1½ wide by 1½ft. high, with a husk at either end, they would probably breed. But Budgerigars breed better, and are far healthier out-of-doors. If you put up an aviary in some sunny corner, say, 6ft. by 4ft. or larger, they would soon multiply, and be a continual source of pleasure and interest to you. Your diet is satisfactory, but you must give green food, such as lettuce, grass in flower, etc. A little ripe apple is also appreciated. Grit and cuttlefish should also be regularly supplied, and when they are feeding young a few oats daily in addition to the regular diet. At this period a stale dry crust of household bread may be given if the birds care for it.

Nun Panting (London Fancier, E. J.).—Put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia into the drinking water (one ounce) every other day for a week. Give your birds a little green food (say, a leaf of fresh lettuce at this season), and a little ripe apple, or such other fruit as they will take. Supply also a millet spray occasionally as a change; keep a piece of clean cuttlefish in the aviary, and gritty sand should also be scattered about. A course of Parrish's chemical food would be helpful on the days you are not giving the magnesia; 1 part of the chemical food to 6 of water would be ample, and form a good tonic for all the birds. If yours is merely a C.P. aviary cage, it would be helpful to let the bird have a fly round the room occasionally, whenever this could be conveniently arranged.

What Parrot? (A. Scott).—You have a female Alexandrine Parrakeet; continue the wholesome diet you are now giving. It is still feeling the effects of the former ill-treatment. Give it several doses of Dinneford's magnesia—one teaspoonful to the ounce of water. Take away the water overnight, and give this the first thing, supplying no other liquid for that day till the whole has been consumed. There should be three days between each dose, and four or five doses should be ample; in between put sufficient Parrish's chemical food in the drinking water to make it the colour of pale port wine, and continue chemical food for a couple of months. As its appetite is poor, you could give it a little boiled maize; prepare as advised in our reply to "J. W. Sds." At the same time, as soon as the bird is eating freely of the seed mixture, gradually wean it from the maize. There should be a marked improvement in, say, a fortnight; if not, repeat query, with full details.

Will It Talk? (E. C. D.).—It is a Roseate or Rose-breasted Cockatoo (Cacatua roseicapilla). This species has a good reputation for talking in its native country, thus proving that it has the power of speech; however, the majority of the specimens brought to this country do not do much in the talking line, but are chummy and companionable birds, fair mimics, droll, and accomplished acrobats. Keep it where it will hear plenty of conversation; also teach it by constant repetition, and it will ultimately, at any rate, utter a word or two. A light spraying with tepid water twice a week, choosing a sunny genial day, will be beneficial, but it must be kept carefully out of draught till dry.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Canary (W. J. Seaver).—Well developed bird fever. It seems inexplicable why this should have arisen amongst your thirty birds in a large, wooden-backed aviary that is kept in such a hygienic condition. Some infected bird or appliance must have introduced it.

GENERAL.

Answered by the Editor.

Young 'Gales (Philomela).—This is not a matter with which we can identify ourselves. You can, of course, if you choose, communicate direct with some fancier or other whose name is familiar to you.

Illustrated Ideas (J. Duckworth).—Has already appeared. (H. Beddall), Very similar notion has been already used. (H. Hickson), Note previous reply.

Outdoor Aviary (E. M. Burlingham).—Many thanks for your notes, which we shall hope to publish in due course.

Many Thanks for interesting news items, photos, etc., to W. H. Bray, E. M. B., and G. L.

Shows, etc. (Novice A.S.).—An "open" show is a show at which anyone who chooses can enter birds for competition. The charge (entry fee) and the classes are set out in the show schedules, which have to be obtained from the secretary of the fixture. Many shows, but not all, have special classes for novices. Skilful hand-washing certainly improves most birds; when it is necessary depends on the state of the plumage. A fancier living in a large, smoky town needs to "tub" his birds more often than the country fancier.

HIGHGATE, HAMPSTEAD AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting, held at headquarters, Spencer Hall, Dartmouth Park Hill, N.W., on March 25th, Mr. W. Ward in the chair. The secretary asked for nominations, to which a response of 18 came forward, including Messrs. H. F. Chick (Nottingham), J. A. Simpson (Kilburn), A. Wakefield (East Finchley), F. Sparks, H. March, Harmstrong, B. T. Dann (Hampstead), C. W. Law, W. Dewbury (Highgate), J. F. H. Trigger, W. Cowie, B. Elton, J. Crocker, E. Mound (Kentish Town), S. Serine, G. Eades (Upper Holloway), Truwell (Tuffnell Park), and Mrs. H. W. Page. A schedule was arranged for British bird show next meeting, also specials for same. It was decided to have a country ramble in June, the secretary to get all necessary information, and to report on same. In the absence of Mr. Robson, a debate was opened by the secretary on selecting for and feeding during the breeding season. Many questions were asked, and the opinions of one another were freely exchanged. Questions were asked by Messrs. Turner, W. G. Dickson, Hastings, Johnson and others.—GEO. H. NEAL, hon. secretary.

MAKING REMOVABLE WIRE FRONTS.

SIR,—Allow me through your valuable paper CAGE BIRDS to ask if any reader could tell me what things I should require for making loose wire cage-fronts (soldered, of course.).

MAKING A FOUNTAIN FOR AN AVIARY.

SIR,—I have made an aviary fountain, the same as Mr. Stephen Moody's, and I have got it to work, only I can't get the water to flow back into the reservoir. When I open the tap B, instead of flowing back, it lets all the air escape. I should be very glad if Mr. Moody will explain how it is and what to do to prevent it. He does not state how long the fountain will spray.

THE SLAUGHTER OF BULLFINCHES IN NOTTINGHAMSHIRE.

SIR,—As a constant reader of CAGE BIRDS, I thought the following might be interesting to other readers. It concerns the slaughter of the handsome Bullfinches here in Nottinghamshire. There is a small village close to where I live, called Wheatley, and nearly every inhabitant has an orchard planted with cherry trees. It appears that Bullie is very fond of the young buds of these, and makes great havoc among them at this time of the year. In consequence of this the orchard owners have what is called a Bullfinch Club, and pay ½d. per head for the dead birds brought in. One man told me that over 400 Bullies had been shot since January, and that he had shot 200 of them with his own gun. He says that they do enormous damage to the young cherry buds, and that they get so bold that the noise from the gun does not disturb them in the least.

PYRRHULA.

THE WILD BIRDS AND SEVERE WEATHER.

SIR,—I thought I should just like to give to your many readers a little of my experience in the feeding and looking after of our feathered friends during the hard weather. I am afraid that we have lost a great many of the more shy of our birds, birds that will not hold themselves "pensioners," but will sooner fall a prey to hunger. I make a daily practice of clearing a piece of ground in front of my window and placing on it food and water. You soon see who are your "pensioners." I am sure you are well repaid by their antics. It is most amusing to watch them through the window. Nothing suits the majority of birds better than a piece of fat meat or rough bone with a little meat attached, or a lump of suet. When the larger birds shake and knock the lumps about, the smaller ones pick up the fragments. The small Tits are in and out amongst the whole lot, and at home at all times. When the severe weather commenced, and a few "pensioners" came, my wife knew every one and could tell how many of each kind came. But in two or three days she could not keep count, especially of the Starlings. Mr. Starling would have you believe that he is a mighty busy fellow (which no doubt he is). He likes to lord it over all the rest; and then they quarrel amongst themselves. But I like the Starling and the way he walks and struts about. As soon as the Starling has had enough, he will perch upon the nearest convenient place, and there trill out his song. While the ground was thick with snow, you could see, after he had lost his hunger, he was merry and jubilant. The birds that hold aloof from us and scorn the idea of being "pensioners" are such as the Fieldfare, Redwing, and Missel Thrush. These birds can make shift so long as the berries last, but this year's crop of wild fruits was small here, and the birds mentioned had to go without. In my rambles I saw lots of Missel Thrushes in the last stage of existence. I saw one very sad incident. On the snow in a meadow a poor worn-out Missel Thrush sat huddled up, and just at that moment a Jackdaw made a pounce down upon him. The Thrush gave a sort of exhausted "flop" and struck out, and the Jack missed his mark. My presence favoured the Thrush, but my return journey proved that the weak went to the wall. I am very sorry to find that we have been almost cleared out of the Missel Thrush. Though the Missel is not such a good musician as the Song Thrush, yet he livens up a landscape and tells you of the early days of Spring. I had a walk this week, where I should have encountered at least a dozen pairs of Missel Thrushes, and I did not hear one. The Missel Thrush is not a strongly constituted bird, though he looks strong; anyone attempting to rear him from the nest will find him subject to cramp and a weakness in his legs. The Fieldfares and the Redwings have equally suffered. Through all the severity of the winter I only saw one Missel Thrush in my garden (my garden is very private), and he was in a weak condition, but would not have any of my charity, and made his way to a neighbouring shrubbery. The following day I found him in his last sleep. The birds are our national birthright, and we ought to be proud of them. A few scraps and a little water we ought to be pleased to give them. Those who did not avail themselves of the last opportunity of feeding our feathered friends should not forget whenever it again occurs.

THE PREPARATION OF BIRDS FOR EXHIBITION.

SIR,—I notice in your issue of the 27th inst. a letter from a reader asking for advice on preparing birds for the show bench. My opinion is that a man cannot hope to win unless he is willing to "fake" his birds. When I say fake, I do not mean to imply anything dishonest; but, in my opinion, a bird that is "prepared," whether by colour feeding, dressing the plumage to put on gloss, or any other means, is a "faked" specimen, because it is made to appear that which it is not. It seems a most extraordinary system that allows a man to put an altogether artificial colour on his bird by feeding, and yet disqualify him if he puts it on by hand! I cannot see any difference between the bird that is coloured by food and the one that is coloured by a paint pot. Both are faked, and both should be treated alike. This equally applies to the gloss which we so often see on the plumage. If it were the result of health and cleanliness, then it should be encouraged; but it is not, it is the result of the mixtures which are added to the bath water, and which give the bird an altogether unnatural appearance. In my opinion, the prizes should go to the birds which are shown in their most natural state, and the sooner that the "preparing" business is abolished, the better. I am sure that if it was, numbers of bird lovers would be only too glad to show their birds who now refuse to encourage a system which is not only unfair, but also encouraging cruelty.

THE CAGE BIRD FANCY IN BARTON AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—Still another correspondent of the Barton C.B.S.; this time the chairman! Does this gentleman wish to keep to the subjects I alluded to, or does he wish to pass to something else? Now, I don't wish in any way whatever to question the character of Mr. Oldridge, knowing him to be far above the average of ordinary working men. But a man should never run backwards down a hill, neither should he shelter behind a hedge to throw stones. You, Mr. O., state I abused your hon. secretary. I am pleased you mention this, as I am willing to apologise, because I don't want any ill-feeling between us. Please don't try to bring it about. As regards talking round your members, I challenge anyone to prove this conduct. Mr. Oldridge, you far exceed the limits of our little differences, and trespass on business affairs. Had it not been for you and your "pal," one society only would be in existence. Can you remember how the room we at present occupy was proposed, seconded and carried, and then you asked if there was any amendment? I still maintain that if you wish to be satisfied with our future conduct you must show us a better example. As for counting my Canaries before they are hatched, can you count yours after they are hatched? If so, why had you last season a bird about a week old before you knew you had one? As you state one of our members has still fifty birds for sale, I wish to inform you that this paper has an advertising column, if you wish to use it for him. But I must say that among our seventeen members we have not two dozen for sale.

H. CHAMBERLAIN, Hon. Sec.

THE NESTING OF THE GOLDFINCH

SIR,—I have followed with interest the correspondence which has appeared in your columns on this subject, and, being a lover of the Goldfinch, have found nests in the following trees:—Pear, apple, cherry, elm, sycamore, chestnut, willow, elder and thorn. I found three particular nests in ash trees, overhanging certain roads. Two seasons ago I saw a nest on an outside branch of a tall Wellingtonia, and also one at the very top of an Irish yew. I have also found the average number of eggs to be five. Goldfinches often lay six eggs in the first nests, and hatch and rear all the young birds.

C. LEVENTON.

WHAT IS THE RECORD FOR EARLY MULES?

SIR,—Will the writers please accept my thanks for replies concerning early Mules? A friend of mine will not believe it possible to have them so early. He has been a breeder for 40 years, and never had them so, and he thinks it impossible. He never tried to get them so early. Some people will never believe a thing unless they say it themselves. Again thanking your contributors.

ROWLEY ELSTON.

SIR,—In reply to the question respecting early Goldie Mules by Rowley Elston, I may say that a friend of mine has at present a nest of two mules, which hatched on March 11th last, and are still doing well. The Finch is an Irish one, caught as a pate, in August. My friend also has another hen down, with the same Finch, and she is now due to hatch four eggs.

LIVERPOOL AMALGAMATED SHOW.

SIR,—I beg to thank Mr. A. Christopher and Mr. R. E. Hawkes for their very kind letters, and after reading the same, it is to be hoped everyone interested will let any irritation or annoyance slide. Let us all look forward to the next amalgamated show, which we in Bootle and district hope to make as good as any in the past. I have pleasure in informing the two gentlemen named above that I have been supplied with the names and addresses of the secretaries of the various clubs concerned, and will write these gentlemen in due course. As for "Member of the B.C.F.A.," my answer to him is, that I have no use for anyone who is afraid or ashamed to sign his own name. This, sir, is my last letter on the subject.

JOHN HUNT,
Bootle and District C.B.S.

SIR,—In reference to Mr. Hadwin's and Mr. Hunt's letters, I should like to know why the Garston late Secretary cannot answer for himself and society. I believe Birkenhead were the founders of the Amalgamated Show, and we took it year by year in turn. But I am sorry that Bootle ask: Why did not Liverpool run a show? Do you think for one moment they cannot run a show? I wonder how many miles Bootle is from Liverpool? Do not all assistant-secretaries have a voice when the secretaries themselves are on holidays? If not, it's very near time they had. Of course, a few in Birkenhead spoke about running a show in the Co-operative Hall, a very fine building, and very near everything; trams pass door every few minutes. They are a jolly lot of fellows, win or lose. I feel sorry for Mr. Hadwin, and secretaries and committee who did attend, and then got no further advanced.

THE CONSTRUCTION OF AN OUTDOOR BIRDROOM.

SIR,—I was very interested in Mr. Lawton's article and sketch of an outside birdroom, as with the help of a friend who has just started in the Fancy, I have completed a similar one. We all know the many disadvantages of keeping birds indoors. I gave up the Fancy three years ago for this reason, but I have bought some birds from well-known exhibitors, so am looking forward to the coming season. I have built my room of 1-in. match-boarding, and have covered the whole outside with best thick felt, and in addition I have covered the roof with zinc. It is 7 ft. square, 8 ft. high in front, and 6 ft. at back, with a window 5 ft. 6 in. long by 1 ft. 6 in., facing south. It is fitted with drawers and shelves, and the cost of the whole room is just under 50s. I find it very dry and free from draughts, and on looking at the thermometer at 7 o'clock this morning it registered 50 degrees. If any of your readers are thinking of building one, I feel sure they will be satisfied with it. I find CAGE BIRDS a great help, and anyone who will closely follow its pages cannot fail to gain a lot of good information.

SIR,—With regard to Mr. J. W. Lawton's sketch and article concerning an outdoor birdroom, I would like to make a suggestion as to the inner lining of same. Instead of using match-boarding, would not Russian ply board do as well? It would make the sections far lighter in case of removal, and would also lessen any possibility of the harbouring of red mite and other vermin. The T. and G. boards, especially beaded ones, give every facility for vermin, unless kept scrupulously clean. I am a joiner by trade, so that the sketch naturally interested me, and I recently had occasion to use the ply boards referred to. That alone is my excuse for writing on the subject. As regards the price, it is similar to the match boards, and just as durable for inside work, such as the subject written about. The ply boards can be bought in any lengths and widths up to 12 ft. long and 4 ft. wide. At least, that is what I have used. I trust I am not trespassing on forbidden ground.

F. AMOS.

SOME BIRDS I HAVE KEPT.

SIR,—Permit me to give you a brief description of one or two birds that I have kept. My first bird was a Jackdaw, a very great favourite with everyone. He was caught in a trap, one very snowy day, and had got his leg very badly crushed, but time and attention soon enabled him to get about fairly well; but he always had a lame leg. He turned out a great thief, and you never knew where he was until all at once you would hear "Jack." He came to a most untimely end. One day a friend of mine came to see me, and in sitting down in an armchair flattened poor Jack out, no one having previously noticed him there. My next bird was a Robin, and soon after that someone gave me a hen Robin, which had been won in a raffle. The man who won it didn't want it, and didn't know what to do with it, so he tossed with another to see who should have it. The bird, however, still stuck to him, so he passed it on to me, as a companion for my cock Robin. I think they are most interesting birds, and they have a knowing way of cocking their heads on one side and of looking at you when you give them a nice, dainty fly or grub. I have had foreign birds, too, but I did not find them so attractive as the British birds. The little Tits are very amusing. To watch them hang up with one claw whilst two of them are quarrelling over an insect is very funny, the one holding it like a Parrot, the others trying to get a bit of it. And they are such greedy little things—always on the look-out for something or other, no matter when you go near them. They are great on the bath, too, always having one the moment you put fresh water in. You will see them at it two or three times during the day, but always at an hour before sunset. The most interesting of all birds to me is the Nuthatch. When I am tired, I like to watch him always on the go, up and down, digging great holes in his bit of bark, then driving into his seed with his beak like a sledge hammer; then he will dart up and round again like lightning, never having a moment's rest until evening time. He does the same again in the morning, until you would think he would drop down exhausted. Oftentimes I have gone to the door thinking someone was knocking to come in, only to find that it was my bird. I have another bird, which I came by in a very strange way. A friend of mine was walking down a street, when he saw it amongst a lot of birds. This strange little bird, very rough and very tossed about, had been handed about from one man to another, no one knowing what it was. At last it turned out to be an Alario Finch, a sweet little songster, having very much the song of the Canary. But in colour the bird is just like a Reed Bunting and anyone might take it to be a miniature Reed Bunting. I also found out why it was in such a bad state. It had been sent over with a consignment of birds, which encountered some very bad weather. The waves washed over the vessel, and the poor birds were all drowned, but my poor little chap. No wonder he survived, for he is so hardy. He has come through his moult beautifully. I could, I think, almost fill a book about my birds.

Canary Breeding for Beginners - - Post Free 7d.

By Claude St. John.

A practical, up-to-date guide to the cult of Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner in the hobby. It contains many helpful illustrations, and deals very fully, and in an easily-understandable manner, with the choice, sexing and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the details and difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

THE TYPE OF PRESENT-DAY WINNING NORWICH PLAINHEADS.

SIR,—I have read with interest the discussion on the above matter, and am venturing to send you a sketch of a bird that appears to me as a nice type of Plainhead Norwich, which you may perhaps think good enough for reproduction. I was dreaming the other night about these birds, and the ideal 20th Century type presented itself to me, as per the second sketch enclosed. It made me think of some of the show reports, which read: grand bold head, short wings and tail, and as round as a ball.

CINNAMON BORDER FANCIES AND THEIR COLOUR.

SIR,—I was pleased to see in your last issue another letter from "Cinnamon Border," but I was amused at some of its contents. This particular epistle seemed to me to be full of "doubt." As far as "Cinnamon Border" is concerned, he seems to be right and everybody else wrong! If he refers to CAGE BIRDS of March 13th, he will find a footnote which states "every fancier is entitled to his own opinion." Now, surely, I may have mine! The point in dispute was that there was not a self-cinnamon Border cock previous to six years ago. I have already stated that I exhibited a self-cinnamon cock at Hawick in 1893, and this was moulted out his natural colour. "Cinnamon Border" also asks if I knew of any more self-cinnamon cocks at that time? Yes, I knew and saw one that won at Selkirk in 1892. In my opinion, both these birds were as near to the club's standard type as possible; if not, how did they happen to be 1st and 3rd? He makes use of two statements which I repeat, viz., 1st, "If the Cinnamon Borders are of such old standing as I would have him believe, how is it we did not see them on the show bench?" 2nd, "Is it likely the breeders would always show the greens and keep the cinnamons at home?" Now, I will use some more of "Cinnamon Border's" own words (which appeared in type on March 13th). He said he "knows more than one breeder and exhibitor who have birds (natural colour) that they dare not show, as in nine cases out of ten they would be disqualified for colour feeding." Perhaps his own remark will answer his own question. Personally, I quite agree with a judge disqualifying any bird which in his opinion has been tasting of "dainties" which the Border Fancy Club disallow. Perhaps "Cinnamon Border" will furnish us with the name of the show and catalogue number of the bird he mentioned in his last letter that was disqualified? He wishes to know if I visited the Scottish National last year. Yes, I did, and still adhere to the statement I made, viz., that the 3rd prize winner at Hawick in 1893 was a better colour, in "my opinion," than those exhibited at Edinburgh. I was not at any of the other shows he mentions, but I have been an exhibitor and a frequent visitor to the shows for the last 16 years. It is of no benefit to me to exaggerate. What I have said is quite correct, and I can only refer "Cinnamon Border" to Hawick catalogue for 1893, and to the other exhibitors competing in the same class, if they are still with us.

JOHN DIXON.

A NOTED LINNET.

SIR,—I have not time to bother with such would-be exhibitors as F.A. Watt. It is only another example of the kind of thing that successful exhibitors have to put up with once in a while. Extract the beam from your own eye, Mr. Watt, then you will see clearly the next time you judge Bullfinches.

PRIZE MONEY AT THE WELSH NATIONAL SHOW.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Somerfield's letter in your last issue, I am sorry he thought it necessary to resort to the Press over the matter. It is well known that we suffered a very considerable loss over our last show, and that we are having a prize-drawing to recover it. The prize money has been paid out as far as possible in alphabetical order of the names of winners, and, of course, some are bound to be the last. I am pleased to say that all prize money (excepting our own members') has now been paid. Should we have overlooked anyone, I shall be glad if they will drop me a postcard. As a number of our books of drawing tickets are still out, we have decided to postpone the prize-drawing until Monday next. Will those who have any returns to make kindly do so at once? In conclusion, I should like to thank those fanciers who have patiently borne with us without complaining, and also those who have sent us subscriptions towards our deficit, or sold drawing tickets for us.

R. J. TRUSCOTT,
Secretary, Welsh National C.B.S.

SIR,—May I ask you to please give me a space in your valuable columns for a few lines in reply to Mr. A. Somerfield's letter which appeared in your last week's issue? Of course, all exhibitors should know that it is general to send out prize money in alphabetical order of the names of winners, as we have done, and someone is bound, therefore, to be the last paid. I will, however, say that, in this particular case, it was an oversight on my part in not sending Mr. Somerfield's cheque sooner, as I have always made a point of posting prize money when asked for; but I have been away from home so much of late that his application was mislaid. I can only regret that he should have taken such drastic measures as to resort to the Press, as he must surely know that this does no Society any good, and we few members have done so much for the Fancy in South Wales, in fact, for the whole of the British Isles, with such discouraging results, that it is really very disheartening for the promoters. I am now glad to be able to say that all prize money has been paid.

W. A. TRUSCOTT, Hon. Treasurer.

HOW TO MAKE AND KEEP EGG-FOOD.

SIR,—The following recipe will, I am sure, be acceptable to readers of your admirable paper, CAGE BIRDS: Boil an egg (or eggs) in the usual way for egg-food. Then get a piece of board, and with a knife press the white fine (this will be found better than chopping). The yolk is easily pressed to pieces. Then crush four "Texas Crackers" for every egg, and mix with a fork. Feed the birds, and what you have left put in a vessel of some sort, and place in a moderate oven and dry thoroughly. It will then be ready for storage, and will keep any length of time in a jar or bottle. All you have to do is to damp the quantity you require. I forgot to mention the sugar, which must be added when mixing. The biscuits I mentioned I have found take moisture quickly.

PROPOSED NORTHERN YORKSHIRE CANARY UNION.

SIR,—I have read Messrs. Park's and Ferguson's letters on the above subject. My idea of the Union is this: To work the thing on the same principle as the Cage Bird Union, viz., to take in any Society in North Lancashire and Cumberland. For instance, say the following societies could be induced to join: Lancaster, Barrow, Dalton-in-Furness, Millom, Whitehaven, Egremont, Cleator Moor, Frizington, Harrington, Workington, Cockermouth, Maryport, Carlisle, and any other Society in the district. Say, too, there was a yearly subscription of 7s. 6d. or 10s. for each Society. This would bring in sufficient money to buy a cup or trophy of some kind, after paying working expenses, without any other support. Points should count at each Society's show affiliated to the Union. This would be the means of making a good entry in all Yorkshire classes at any affiliated Society's show, as all members would be anxious to send their birds to as many shows as possible in order to gain points for the cup or trophy. The cup should be won three times in all before becoming the property of the exhibitor. A medal could also be given for each winner of the cup every year. You see, the cup would last at least three years, and possibly six or more before being won right out; therefore, the takings of each year would greatly strengthen the Union financially. Delegates could be elected (one from each Society), and these could meet once a year to draw up rules, etc. A marked catalogue could be sent to the Secretary from all affiliated shows for the counting of points gained for the cup. This is only a suggestion of mine, but I hope it will meet with the approval of the above-mentioned Societies, as it is not my intention to interfere with the business of the C.Y.C.C. or any other club.

F. W. BRADLEY.

SIR,—I have been asked why I have not replied to the letter which appeared in your columns, re the formation of a new Northern Yorkshire Canary Club. I thought your editorial footnote a sufficient answer, but in case any of our members should think I am neglecting my duties, I would say that our club embraces in its area the counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, Durham, and Westmoreland, and if there are any lovers of the Yorkshire Canary who would like the boundary line increased, I feel sure the present members would agree to the proposal, as we are most anxious to do all we can to popularise the Yorkshire in the North of England. I shall be pleased to send last year's handbook to anyone interested.

T. C. CRAWHALL,
Hon. Sec. Northern Yorkshire Canary Club.
121, St. George's Terrace, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

Our Correspondents will note that the term Northern Yorkshire "Canary Union" is used this week.—Editor.

SIR,—Allow me to answer Mr. Furguson on the above subject. He asks in his letter, How is it the fanciers here have not joined the Cumberland Y.C.C.? They must be aware of its existence, as their Secretary had asked their support. I take it, Mr. Ferguson means the C.Y.C.C. I think I can explain how our Secretary wrote him asking him for their support. Previous to our show, some of his fanciers asked us for a good classification for the Yorkshires, as they would give us a good entry. So this was brought up at one of our meetings, and we decided to give seven classes for this section, our Secretary being asked to write Mr. Ferguson to give us some guarantee in entries as promised, this being our first venture on an open show. So you see it was the support of the fanciers in his town he asked for, not the C.Y.C.C. At least, this is what I think. We were not sure of the C.Y.C.C. being still in existence, as it seemed to have gone quiet some time ago. I do not care to bother myself with its affairs, but I think it would be a good thing to take in whole societies on the same principle as the Yorkshire Union, if we could induce them to join. It would repay them with entries in the Yorkshire section, as we would be competing for points at shows held under the Union rules. I should like to have Mr. Ferguson's opinion on this scheme, which I think would benefit the fanciers of this variety, also the shows in their entries, and would be the means of making a good and strong affair. We should feel much obliged if we could have a copy of their rules with number of members, as we would like to do our best in bringing this variety to the front in these districts.

JIM PARK.

HOW I KEEP MY SONG THRUSHES AND SKYLARKS.

SIR,—The Song Thrush is a very good song bird, and nicely coloured if in good condition, but it is apt to get clogged feet if not kept in a proper cage. The cage should be one with a wire grid about an inch-and-half off the bottom; then all the waste food and droppings fall to the bottom of the cage, and remain out of the reach of the bird's feet. This bird, being insectivorous, requires soft food. A good and cheap food can be made with puppy biscuits grated fine, with a small quantity of crissel mixed with it. When giving it to the bird damp it with raw grated carrot. A great many people prefer a hand-reared bird. This will be found a good food to rear the birds on when made softer with "aired" water (or water that has had the chill taken off), but not so that it is sloppy. When rearing Song Thrushes, or any other kind, for that matter, the best way I find is to have them in an old basket, or box, with the nest if procurable, keeping them well covered up and dark until you see signs of their feeding themselves. When they are kept in the daylight they often start pining, of which, if they do, they very often die. The Skylark is another very good songster, and the same food as is prescribed for Thrushes will do for them, with a bit of sheep's kidney or liver that has been placed in the oven and baked hard. When feeding them, grate a small quantity of it into their food, and it will make a great difference. Skylarks are very fond of mealworms and gentles, of which they should have a few every day; and they will also eat, in addition to their ordinary food, Canary seed, hemp seed, and wheat. They require a cage with a canvas or netted top, for when you go near their cage they spring upwards, and if they are in a wooden-topped cage they are apt to hurt their heads. The Skylark is a hard bird to hand-rear, as when it reaches a certain age it is often taken with the cramp. An excellent plan is to have a good-sized cage when you cage them off, and have a clover turf in it. The way to cure them of the cramp is as follows:—When a bird is taken with it, dip its legs in turpentine, and then place the bird close to the fire. In the course of birdkeeping all does not go on well and in a straightforward manner with a fancier, and at some time or the other our birds are taken with some complaint, and many a time a good bird would be saved of we only knew what to do at the time. In the moulting period, for instance, many of us are anxious if our birds are not moulting or are stopped in the middle of the moult. When the ordinary way of transferring the bird from a warm room to a cold one, or vice-versa, has failed, I have known flowers of sulphur mixed in their food to bring about the desired effect, and if the birds get too loose in their bowels, French chalk will soon put them right. When having sent for birds you receive them apparently dead, the holding them between your hands and breathing on them very often brings them round again. Another way is to hold them in your hand up the chimney as far as you can. Whether it is the warmth from the fire or the sulphur which passes up the chimney I cannot say, but if there is any life left in them at all, this treatment will always bring them round. If you have a bird which has a tumour, if it is not looked after the tumour will leave a bald patch where it has been, which will always remain. My own method of removing tumours is to catch the bird with my left hand, and place its head between the two first fingers, and with the thumb raise the feathers off the tumour (which is very often on the neck or shoulder), and with my right hand burst it with a needle. Then I put one drop of Friar's Balsam on the place. Then I turn it into its cage again. It will be found that by this means a bird will go on alright. When birds are kept in a room where gas is burned, they sometimes get a complaint which is often mistaken for asthma, but which is really what is called "being gassed." They sit in a lump with their beak open, and it seems great trouble for them to get their breath. I cure them of this by giving them a few drops of essence of peppermint and French brandy in their water. I don't say that my way of keeping birds, or my remedies, are the best of all, but I do say that they have always suited me, and those I know who use the same methods have also found that they have always suited them.

J. BARBER.

A QUESTION OF RADIUS.

SIR,—It has often been a subject of wonder to me why so many Cage Bird Societies can be found in a small radius like that of Manchester. I have set myself the task of trying to unravel what appears to be, to say the least, foolishness. In many cases I find that societies are started not so much to help the fancier, as from pique by a disappointed member—generally one who will not bow to the ruling of those in office. Under such circumstances, is it possible for a new society to prosper? I think, personally, it is far better for a man to join an old recognised society, which caters better for the novice than it is possible for a new society to do. Would it not be better to have one good society than half-a-dozen small ones?

THE BORDER FANCY CANARY IN THE SOUTH.

Is there a Northern and a Southern Type?

SIR,—My attention has been called to a letter appearing elsewhere, signed "Wee Macgregor." I would much prefer to ignore it, as the writer has chosen to hide his identity under a nom de plume; but as he has made remarks that are untrue, I feel I cannot let it pass without comment. "Wee MacGregor's" assumption that I have shown at some of the Southern shows, and been well beaten, blamed the judges, and everyone and everything but myself, is quite untrue, as I have not yet sent any Borders out to shows, and am therefore not a disappointed exhibitor. Far from it. I have been to several shows, including the last Crystal Palace show, and I still maintain that the style of Border is much too thick as compared with the Northerner, and is not the type or the style of the Border Fancy Club's standard. Possibly "Wee McGregor" possesses some of the thick-necked birds, as my letter apparently has rubbed him up the wrong way. As regards a specialist judge, if "Wee McGregor" will only speak conscientiously, he must admit my contention that judges like Messrs. Bennet, Patterson, and Wilson would be styled specialist judges as against those who judge every variety. How can he argue otherwise? My letter was written with the intention of having a fair, open and friendly discussion on the proper and correct type of Borders, so that we might know what to breed for, and how to breed up to the standard. I regret that my efforts result in untrue and ungentlemanly remarks from "Wee McGregor," who chooses to withhold his name, and to attack me where I should not have seen it. had his letter not been pointed out to me by a friend. But if the cap fits, "Wee McGregor" can wear it.

J. SMITH.

SIR,—I have been much interested in the correspondence regarding the type of the Border Fancy Canaries now winning in the South. Personally, I am strongly in favour of the "slim-necked" sort, and trust that we shall see some more letters on the subject. I should like to ask a question regarding size. If I remember rightly, Mr. Hadwin stated in his article on the Border Fancy Canary a few months ago, that size was unimportant; but "the smaller the better." Mr. Patterson, when writing on the "Wee Gems," said that he preferred them rather under than over the 5½ inches Now, this point arises: I was told by a prominent southern breeder, the other day, that I must keep from breeding birds too small, as we never see the very small ones winning. Which, then, is correct? Or is it that there are two types—one for the North and one for the South? Surely this should not be, as the bird remains a Border Fancy, whether shown North, South, East, or West.

SIR,—I notice that some person, writing under the nom de plume of "Wee McGregor" (from some reason perhaps better known to himself), states that the birds which win in England also do the same in Scotland, and to strengthen his remarks mentions a few of the shows held in and around London. Now, if one looks into the catalogue of any of the shows mentioned they will see that each had a judge who ought to know what is required to make up a winning Border Fancy, hence the reason such shows were supported by the gentleman from Scotland whose name he makes use of. But it is not to be taken for granted that Mr. Smith's letter is "far from the truth." I beg to inform this "Wee McGregor" that I did not require any "pat on the back" to place the true and only ideal of the Border Fancy before your readers. Seemingly he also doubts my remarks that I know from letters received from fanciers that such birds are to be found in England and in the money at shows. I have enclosed you, Mr. Editor, a few of those letters, to let your readers see that I am sincere, and that my advice to discard thick-necked birds is reliable. Seeing the pairing time is now at hand, if they take my advice, I am sure they will find out for themselves who is telling the truth. "Wee McGregor" also says that I libel my own countrymen's birds from my description of what an ideal Border should be. This is another mis-statement. All I say is that such thick-necked birds are continually in the money with some judges. His remark: Is it because Mr. Patterson, when at home, cannot always beat them, etc., and his enquiry, re the shape of my Palace winner's neck, I will pass over with the contempt it deserves. Only I may inform him that when I send a bird out to a show it is to see it stand on its merits, and if any of my neighbours have better birds there, then I am the first to congratulate them. When writing as I did, in reply to Mr. Smith, it was only with the hope of coming to a better agreement on this vexed point. We neither want bull-necked birds, nor birds with thin necks, but the happy medium. The standard of excellence given by the B.F.C.C. is the ideal and modern type of bird. Before, such thick-necked birds were more to the front, but now, with careful selection, they are, so far as Scotland is concerned, rapidly disappearing. This correspondent seems to doubt the point. Has he really been blind to the strides that have been made in this direction of late years? He must either be a little dull, or does not want to see that our "Wee Gem" is yearly advancing both in shape of neck and in type likewise. This will also answer his remarks on the point of the "more modern type" of bird. The Border Fancy Club have never altered their standard, and, what is more to the point, could not do so even if they tried. The bird depicted on its front page of Rules has been a guide to all admirers of the breed since the standard of excellence was drawn up. However, this does not alter the fact that one judge favours one type of bird, and another something different. One has only to keep their eyes open at shows where more than one judge is officiating to see this verified. Fanciers to be able to keep amongst the tickets must study the judges' wishes as well as their own, and thereby soon find out the particular type, or the various fads, that each judge thinks to be the standard. That we can all be on the right track is quite impossible, and it was with the friendly intention of arriving at a solution that my article (and also the answer to Mr. Smith) were penned. To say the same birds win in all parts is away from the fact, as I know from experience that most of the foremost exhibitors study to place before a judge a bird as near his wishes as they have in their bird room. I am also sure that the same "Wee McGregor," if he is a breeder of any repute or puts up a number of pairs every season, has found this out before now. Seeing he hides his identity behind a nom de plume, one is not able to judge whether he is an exhibitor and breeder, or some insincere crank. Such a poor show of "criticism" will not convince the many intelligent breeders of the variety who have got their knowledge from experience, and from what they have seen on the show bench.

J. PATTERSON.

A PROM'SING BEGINNING.

SIR,—I have started bird-keeping for the first year. I have got two pairs together, a pair of Norwich Canaries, a cock Greenfinch and a Bullie hen. I have just got the latter in an ordinary breeding cage, but I think they will do all right. I put in an old nest to them, and they pulled it about till they had the cage like a stable; but I have got it sorted again. They feed each other all day, and keep carrying moss backwards and forwards. The Greenie was only caught about a month ago, and is quite tame already.

UNDER THE WHITE ROSE.

SANDY Lane and District C.B.A., held a very successful supper and social on March 23rd, the event heing in celebration of the great success attained by their members during the past season. The splendid cup won by Messrs. Bailey and Swanger was on view, and greatly admired. Supper was served in the schoolroom (where they held their shows), the same ladies being responsible as attend to the wants of fanciers on show days. Rabbit pie was the menu, and real good it was. Supper over, all adjourned to the Victoria Hotel, where Host Milburn had everything in readiness for the social part of the evening. The chair was occupied by Mr. D. Sowden, who congratulated Mr. Bailey on his splendid achievement, also Messrs. Drake and Son, Shaw Bros., and others. Mr. Calvert ably officiated at the piano for the whole of the evening, and Messrs. Battye, Watmough, Bentley, Wellock, and Sunderland each did splendid service in song, whilst the comic element was exceptionally well sustained by Mr. Ezra Varley (not much in size, but comic every inch), his recitations in thorough Yorkshire dialect keeping the company in roars of laughter.

THE chairman next called upon Mr. Samuel Dean for a few remarks, and he spoke upon the successes attained hy members of this society, and complimented each and all on their efforts. Mr. Bailey was next asked to say a few words, and this rather staggered "Jimmy," as he never expected it, but of course he had to do his best. He explained that he would much rather show birds than talk about them. However, he had now won what he had set his mind on eleven years ago, and though it had been a long struggle, he felt gratified at having accomplished his aim. After a few more songs, Mr. Drake, sen., was called upon, and ably responded. He was followed by one of the brothers Shaw, the one that isn't—well, 'nuff said!—who stated that they were triers and hoped to do still better another year. Ex-councillor Greenwood next spoke a few encouraging words to those who had failed, and hoped that they would go on trying until they succeeded and do their utmost to hold up the name of their little village in the Canary Fancy. Mr. Sowden now left the chair, as in consequence of recent illness he could not stay late. His place was taken by Mr. Smith, who filled it to everyone's satisfaction for the rest of the evening. A few bowls of punch were brought in, the company all rising to the toast of the evening. Amongst those present were Messrs. Knight, Watmough, Smith, Wilson, and Thornton, all of the "old brigade" of Yorkshire fanciers, and also many ladies.

BRADFORD City had a discussion on "Yorkshires" at their headquarters on Saturday evening last, the opener being Mr. J. Hartley, who dealt with the different types of bird in vogue, the quality, position, etc., after which he invited questions, more especially from the novices, as it was for their special benefit that these affairs were arranged. Many points of interest were brought forward, Mr. Hartley replying in a very able manner. Messrs. Ludbrook, Fortnam, Halliday, Hill, Dean, Wharton, Livesey, and others joining in the discussion. A vote of thanks to the leader was accorded very heartily at the termination.

I HEAR that certain members of Gt. Horton O.S. are doing exceedingly well, despite the cold and unseasonable weather. Two of them have each a nest of two (usually termed "twins"). My word, the membership will be going up by leaps and bounds in the time to come!

MR. H. H. TOWERS, the acting secretary of the C.M.Y.C.C., is busy at present preparing for the annual general meeting, and as it is on the rules that members not being able to attend may put business forward in writing to the secretary, before the date of meeting, it is hoped many will take advantage of this. There is much important business to be brought forward, the following items being of exceptional interest: That the annual subscription be advanced (present subscription is 1s. 6d.); the questions of classification; separate novice classes; allotment of patronage; balance-sheet; election of officers, etc. It will be seen that a good turn-up of members is required.

THE medals of the Yorkshire Union have all been called in to have the centres replaced; the type of bird thereon was not good, but after repeated attempts a very satisfactory one has been produced, which will greatly enhance the appearance and value of the medals.

THE Yorkshire Union had a stiff programme for the meeting on Saturday last, and an adjournment was made before half the business had been gone through. The balance-sheet shows a balance of £16 13s. 7d. on the year's working, and a total balance of £26 17s. 7½d. in hand, not at all bad for the end of the second year, since the re-union. The most troublesome item was the rumoured irregularity at late Union shows, and this matter took up some considerable time. The result of the investigations was placed before the council, and the parties interested were in attendance. The case provides plenty of food for thought, and suggests the following question, a question that must be settled before the subject can be grappled with at all: "Can a bird or birds be the bona-fide property of any person when there are conditions attached to the sale, conditions which really bar a fancier from doing as he likes with the birds before a certain stated time has passed?" My own answer must be "No, certainly not." How can any bird or birds be the bona-fide property of any man when conditions are attached to such birds that would (if the conditions are carried out), debar the man from selling the birds if he were disposed to do so, and a satisfactory price was offered? The sentence of the Union seems to prove that such a sale of exhibition birds is not satisfactory, and not to be allowed at Yorkshire Union shows.

A USEFUL REDMITE TRAP FOR NESTS.

Sent by T. Mason, 6, Victoria Street, Withington, Manchester.

The sketch shows a trap for mites in the nest-pan. Drill a hole through the bottom of the nest-pan about 3-16 in. in diameter. Then get a pill box lid, or any small lid of cardboard. Gum the edge, and place it under the pan, with a very small piece of bacon swath (or rind) in. It is easily taken off and refixed, without disturbing the young or old birds. The result is marvellous, as it catches all the red mite in the nest, and the young thrive far better. The nest-pans are easily drilled with a pen-knife or sharp piece of iron.—THOS. MASON.

TO AID EGG-BOUND HENS.

Sent by W.C. Sutherland, 294, Kingsbury Road, Erdington.

Attached please find a sketch of a little idea of mine, for assisting hens when egg-bound. I think readers will find this very useful and effective. I may say that I saved two valuable Yorkshire hens with it last week. A is an ordinary pottery-ware nest-pan (as advertised in CAGE BIRDS), with a piece of flannel laid inside as a lining. B, the ventilation holes. C, an ordinary breakfast cup. D, hot water. Half-fill the breakfast cup with boiling water; then place the nest pan on top of same, so that the steam rises through the holes in the nest-pan. Place the bird in the nest (on the flannel), after putting oil on the vent, then place another piece of flannel over the bird, leaving a little space uncovered by her head for air. Renew the water as it cools. Keep the bird like this for half-an-hour, if necessary, then place her in a nest in a warm cage, and she will lay in a very short time without further trouble.—W. C. ## THE SHOWS.

WEST BROMWICH & DIS. C.B.S.

Table show held at headquarters, Dartmouth Hotel, on March 10th. Three classes were provided. Mr. Weaver (Wolverhampton) judged, and gave every satisfaction. There were six entries in the British bird class, five in the Mule pair class, and only two in the Hybrid pair class. Mr. Carter gave a special of 2s. 6d. for best exhibit. Mr. G. Key won 1st and spl. with a very good Bullie, which also took the half-crown spl. After the judging the club business was gone into.—DUFFIELD AND JENNINGS, Hon. Secs.

HYSON GREEN (Nottingham) C.B.S

Another capital table show was held on March 16th. There was a large attendance of members and friends. Mr. J. Bertie was to have judged, but owing to a severe attack of bronchitis was unable to attend. Messrs. Cottingham and Wolfe kindly officiated, and gave first-rate satisfaction.

BUFF NOR. HENS: 1, 2, J. T. Birch, two gems; 3, Barnes; vhc, Hill, close up to winners. YELL.: 1, Hill, with a rattling good one, regular "Bertie" type. ### DARLINGTON C.B.S.

Table show of British birds, etc., held at Half Moon Hotel, on March 27th, when a good number of birds were staged, especially in the Linnet class. Considering the show was for field-moulted birds, it quite came up to expectations. Mr. W. Rutherford (Crook) placed the cards, and gave great satisfaction.

BORDER CITY (Carlisle) O.S.

Members' pair show, held at headquarters, March 18th. The entry was far above expectations, sixty cages being staged. The judging was no easy matter owing to the good quality, both in Border Fancies and Norwich and Hybrid pairs. Amongst the British and foreign birds were many fit to win in keen competition. The secretary, Mr. Chaplow, had everything in order, and was most obliging. Mr. G. McWilliams was winner of medal for most points in British and Foreign Birds, and Mr. Thomlinson medal for most points in Canary section. Messrs. G. Davidson and T. J. Robson judged, and their awards gave every satisfaction.

POPLAR AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

First Finch show, held at headquarters, March 25th, and whilst regretting the entries were so few, numbering 15 in all, we are led to believe, judging by the remarks overheard, that this section will be a very strong one this year. Mr. Allen Silver judged, and favoured us with a critique on the birds. Mr. Silver also gave us some very useful hints as to the proper kind of cages to stage British birds in, and the way to put a bird down for showing. Members were very free with their questions, which kept him well occupied. The show concluded with the passing of a very hearty vote of thanks to the judge.

CLASS 1: 1, Lowrie; 2, Priseman; 3, vhc, Braithwaite. CLASSES 2 to 5: 1, Kidman; 2, Priseman; 3, Braithwaite; vhc, Priseman; bc, Cowles. CLASS 6: 1, Kidman; 2, Depradines; 3, Boyson. CLASS 9: 1, Boyson; 2, Cowles.—H. W. COOK, hon. secretary.

HAMILTON (Cadzow Oaks) O.S.

Meeting held in Court Room, Town Hall, on March 6th. A table show of British birds and Mules was held. GREENFINCHES: 1, 2, 5, Marlin, 1st rattling good bird, best condition in class; 2nd preferred to 1st by some; 3, 6, Haddow, 3rd good; 4, Hamilton. GOLDFINCH: 1, Hamilton, nice Britisher; 2, Marlin, foreigner. A.O.S. SMALL HARDBILL: 1, 2, 3, Marlin, Linnet, Twite, and Linnet, three grand exhibits; 4, M'Intyre, good Linnet; 5, 6, Haddow. DARK MULE: 1, 3, Marlin; 2, Jobnston. Most of the evening was taken up with a discussion as to whether or not we should hold an open or radius show this year. This discussion will be finally settled at next meeting. The secretary has engaged the Lesser Town Hall for 12 months. Meetings are held on the first Saturday of each month, at 7 p.m.; fanciers heartily invited. A cage-making demonstration will take place at next meeting, April 3rd. First annual social held on February 20th, and was voted a great success by all. Twenty-three ladies and gentlemen and several children sat down. The evening passed merrily with songs and recitations. Mr. W. Shearer was particularly happy in his recitation, "The Broken Bowl." Several comrades from the Barracks assisted with the programme.—A. CANT, hon. secretary.

GLASGOW & W. COUNTIES CLUB.

Meeting, held in the Good Templars' Hall, 122, Ingram Street, on March 27th, the president, Mr. Brannigan, presiding over a good attendance. It was moved, and carried unanimously, that the rule book be the membership card for the year. The secretary reported having received a claim for two specials from Dunfermline. It was decided that, as there were not three members of the club showing in the class, the specials be not granted, but as there has been some mistake the claimant be granted his membership for the year. Mr. Young moved that any show receiving the patronage of the club, unless three members are showing, shall have no medals granted to it. Mr. McFarlane moved that rule 15 be deleted. This was seconded by Mr. McInnes. Mr. Pettigrew moved the previous question, which was carried. With the exception of three, all the specials and medals have been handed over. Seven specials were handed in for the monthly show for the seven classes, and they were allocated in the following manner:—Crest, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and one for the second best first in the hall. The judges appointed are Messrs. Brannigan, Young, Malcolmson, Rodie, and Cant.

GOLDFINCH, BRIT.: 1, Small, grand, square-cut face, rare tanning, beautifully mooned, regular stormer; 2, Connelly, good size; 3, Pettigrew; 4, Lawson; 5, Renfrew; 6, Drysdale; 7, Knox. FOR. GOLDFINCH: 1, spl, McInnes, rare size, nice stamp, wins special for best in hall; 2, Pettigrew, another nice bird; 3, Renfrew, rare chubby build; 4, Small; 5, Drysdale; 6, Shearer; 7, Knox. LINNET: 1, spl, 5, Ramsey, 1st well-known winner, admirably put down, good size, nice nut brown, well laced; 5th good field-moulted specimen; 2, spl, McInnes, presses winner hard; 3, 4, spl, Pettigrew, brace of good ones, shown in spanking order; 6, spl, Renfrew; 7, Thomson. GREENFINCH: 1, 2, Ramsay, pair of beauties, rare size and colour; 3, spl, Small, might have won had he been better staged; 4, Lawson, still another of the right stamp; 5, Pettigrew, good yellow; 6, 7, Knox, 6th best Greenfinch in class, if not the best in hall, but was very wild, and had made himself rough when judging, which put him back. SISKIN: 1, 7, Lawson, 1st hot fed one; 2, Connelly, nat. col., some preferred, good dense broad cap, well laced; 3, Pettigrew, grand size, well polished, shown to perfection; 4, Small; 5, spl, McInnes; 6, Ramsay. MEALY REDPOLL, ETC.: 1, Pettigrew, good size, nicely marked; 2, Renfrew, presses hard; 3, Lawson; 4, Drysdale; 5, Shearer. Classes for next monthly show:—Redpolls, Mealy Redpoll or Twite, Chaffinch, and Bramblefinch. A hearty vote of thanks to the chairman brought a very happy meeting to a close.—T. DRYSDALE, secretary.

The Novices Notebook.

This page consists of topical hints, addressed chiefly to beginners, concerning every branch of the hobby of bird-keeping, and the notes are contributed from time to time by various leading experts.

The actual process of mating should be getting in full swing by the time these notes appear. Indeed, a very large number of birds will be already mated, and in many cases young are hatched and coming forward nicely. And doubtless in many other cases birds have been put together with no better result than to inflict the first lash of disappointment to their owner, either because they were not in a fit condition for mating when put together, or because, owing to the circumstances under which they are kept, the time was too early to begin.

Unfortunately we do not hear so much of these failures as we are apt to hear of the comparatively few successes. Unfortunately, be it truly said, for this very good reason: because the new beginner, brimful of high hopes and enthusiasm, seeing the record of these successful ventures, and being as yet untempered by any chastening disappointment, is practically bereft of ordinary discretionary powers, and possessed of but one idea, which is to follow as closely as possible on the heels of his fellow-fancier's recorded success. The birds, therefrom, are rushed together as speedily as possible, and they may perchance make another success—but again, perhaps, they may not. If they do succeed, the chances may be ten to one that we shall hear of it; if they fail, the chances are at least a hundred to one that we shall not hear of it.

Having Both Birds Ready.

One great step towards a successful issue and early results of mating is to have both birds in a nice fresh condition before they are put together. It is not enough for the cock to be in high condition bubbling over with song and almost too restless to stand still anywhere, and frantically calling the hen to be fed. The hen, as well, should be flapping about the perches, almost or quite as restless as he is, and should respond to his calls so promptly that the two notes follow almost as one continuous note; and the chirp of the hen that is so well forward is scarcely emitted before she dashes down to meet the cock at the wires in the partition, or the screen, whatever it may be that separates them.

It will often happen that a hen is not so forward as the cock, and then she goes much less often and not so ardently to the wires to be fed. It is as though she went half-heartedly, and yielded only to his insistent wooing with little desire on her own part.

This is apt to be misconstrued by the novice, who, seeing the hen go occasionally to meet the cock, thinks she is too forward to be left unmated. On the contrary, if she is left to herself a day or two longer, the probability is that every day will see a great increase in her ardour, and a corresponding shortening of the time that will be taken to settle down and get to work when they are at last put together. But if put together in the condition described, there is a great probability of the cock bullying the hen a good deal to no purpose, and the pair may dilly-dally about for a week or two before setting to work in a business-like manner, and during all this time the birds will be toying with nest-building and wasting a vast amount of material.

How Not To Do It.

Do not bring about your matings by keeping the birds separately in small cages where they cannot even see each other until the eventful day when you imagine they are ready, and both the time and the season suits your convenience, and then catch both birds and turn them together into a breeder without any sort of introduction. Such an unsociable union may turn out well; but, here again, it may not.

There is a recognised and beaten track for the marital union of our birdy pets. Where one uses a double breeding cage for each pair of birds, which is a great convenience in many ways when space and material are not at a premium, the cock should be placed in one side and the hen in the other, with the wire slide between, which gives the birds unlimited opportunities for striking up a close acquaintance with each other, whilst the final stages of the feeding-up process are being completed.

Doubtless the birds will soon be seen to be on a friendly footing, and if they have not been put in the breeder too early, and the weather is fair, and the birds in good form, matters will soon develop up to the mature stage we have just described, when the slide may be quietly removed some fine morning when the birds are in the height of their love-making, and the birds either both confined in the one compartment, or allowed the run of both. But do not, as we have already suggested, make the mistake of putting them together when the cock is in the requisite condition, and the hen merely accepts rather than courts his attentions. In the latter case to play a waiting game for a few days is almost invariably the quickest way to reach the goal in view.

The equivalent of the method here given is within the reach of all. The hen should be placed in the breeder, or whatever cage is used for the purpose, in preference to the reverse process, at the proper time, and the cock kept in his ordinary single cage in such a position that he can easily see the hen. Then when he is seen to be singing at her, and they are apparently in good form for mating, put the cock in a wire cage—a nursery or an open-wire show cage answers the purpose very well—and hang this cage on to the front of the breeder, preferably against the end of one of the perches in the breeder, and let him finish his wooing there. At this time of the year it will be a hasty affair with healthy, lusty birds, and a single day may suffice for the pair to be of one mind and one heart, so far as housekeeping is concerned. When this stage is reached—no matter whether it be in a day or a week—turn the cock into the breeder with the hen, and leave them to commence further operations all "on their own."

The Near Future.

Assuming that all these initial stages have now been passed, and the birds are settling down nicely to nest-building, the extra feeding, which has been the rule just prior to putting them together, should be continued, though it may be on a slightly modified scale, until the eggs are laid. Thus from the time when the hen sets earnestly to work to build the nest the egg food may be slightly reduced in quantity, and if given every second day, with a small pinch of inga on the alternating days, it will be more beneficial, and cases of egg-binding more rare than if a full allowance of egg food is given all through. Again, when the first egg is laid the quantity of both should be still further reduced, until by the third or fourth day after egg-laying has commenced the egg food and inga seed have quite vanished out of the dietary.

During incubation a plain diet only should be given, especially if the weather is at all warm or sultry. Plain Canary seed only as a staple, with the least dash of egg food once a week, and now and again a little green food, should suffice. Here, however, a caution is necessary: do not give green food in any appreciable quantity at any time whilst the hen is sitting, especially if the weather is cold, or there will be a considerable risk of the hen remaining off the nest too long at a time, with the natural consequence that the eggs are chilled and spoilt. The merest scrap of green food is sufficient to give at a time whilst the hen is sitting, and if the weather is warm it will be much better to give several small supplies at intervals throughout the day, than to give a large supply all at once.

In the event of the weather suddenly becoming cold, it will be an advantage to add a pinch of hemp and a little summer rape to the diet each day, giving these as extras in the egg drawer, and not mixing them with the bulk of Canary seed in the hopper. This will help materially to keep up the heat of the hen; the effect of the cold upon the eggs is very largely minimised by this method.

Through a Bird-room Window.

By the Rev. C. D. FARRAR.

Chap. XXVIII.—My Zebra Finches.

Like all great schemes, my bird-keeping had very humble beginnings. Newton saw an apple drop from a tree to the ground, hence the theory of gravitation. The glory of Tyre and Sidon arose from the purple droppings of a little dog's mouth who had been eating shell-fish. The great Cunaders came out of the lid of Stephenson's family kettle. My bird-keeping began from idly gazing into the window of a bird-shop at Leeds, one Tuesday morning many years ago. I was killing the time, and as idle people do at such times. I began gazing into the shops.

As it happened, I found myself opposite this shop, and there in the window I was fascinated by a cageful of little speckled birds. I did not in the least know their names, but I thought I had never seen anything more beautiful, and I still think so. They were sitting all in a line and seemed perfectly happy and contented. I of course, could not rest till I had gone inside and enquired the price. I was told that they were 7s. 6d. the pair, that they were called Zebra Finches, and that they came from Australia. You see that once upon a time I was very ignorant.

A Pair "Bagged."

I quickly had a pair caught and put up in a paper bag, which I was assured made an ideal travelling cage, if I did not sit down on them! As soon as I reached home I put them into a big double Canary breeding-cage, the only one I had at the time, and then sat down and had a good look at them. The more I looked the more I fell in love with them, and I dreamed of the day when I should be able to breed a nest of little Zebras. All the dreams ever dreamed by man are more or less chimerical, but I should not like to pass my life without dreams. I could give up tobacco, and alcohol, and clean collars, and servants, and almost everything you can think of—but dreams. Without them the earth is just a backyard sort of place.

The following Tuesday I went and had another look in the same window, and this time I saw a fascinating blue bird about the size of a Linnet. I never knew, by the way, that there were such things as blue birds till then. I at once went and enquired his name, and was told he was an Indigo Blue, and I thought he would make a nice companion for the Zebra Finches.

The very next Friday I was looking over a Fancy paper (CAGE BIRDS had not then been thought of, unhappily), and I saw advertised some Gouldian Finches. I had no more idea than the man in the moon what Gouldian Finches were like; but I sent off for a pair on spec. When they came, and I opened the packing cage, I was fairly blinded by the glory of them; they seemed to my unsophisticated eye to rival Solomon in all his glory. But even my untrained optics saw that there was something wrong, as the birds sat persistently with head under wing, giving an occasional shiver. I watched them for hours from the back of the cage, through a knot hole, to see how they were getting on, but they sat ever the same, and only stirred if I scratched the back of the cage. The next morning I was poorer by thirty shillings; but I had two lovely corpses. I began to think that bird-keeping was like a nigger's wool—it doesn't look very deep, but there are a heap of kinks and curves in it.

Having lost thirty shillings, of course I could not rest till I had spent some more. I accordingly sent for the joiner, and told him to build me an outside aviary. The work occupied about a fortnight; and it certainly looked a very fascinating sort of place when completed, especially when I had planted it with growing shrubs. As the weather was fairly decent, I determined to enlarge my stock. This was not very big or very valuable, to describe it in the method of Thomas Cromwell: Item—one pair of Zebra Finches, in good condition. Item—one Indigo Blue, fair. Item—one Gouldian Finch, ragged.

It didn't make a very big show in an aviary some 40ft. long by 12ft. wide. In fact, it was a case of "find the birds." Those who know me best will feel sure that I soon redressed the balance of Nature between birds and shrubs. That, however, is not to our subject. We are at present concerned with the Zebra Finches. I think I never saw three such happy birds as these Zebras and the Indigo. The Zebra cock began blowing his little penny trumpet like mad, and the Indigo got on top of an elder bush and sang sweetly.

I must say that after a time I got a little bit tired of the penny trumpet. I didn't know at the time what all this trumpeting meant. I thought he was merely summoning the walls of some imaginary Jericho of his own to fall down. What he wanted, of course, was some nesting material. This suddenly dawned upon me. No wonder he was so uneasy. If we hear that Guy Fawkes was fretful in "Little Ease," we are not pained by Guy Fawkes' lack of Christian resignation.

A Finger in the Pie.

I at once supplied the omission, and humbly sought his pardon. I don't think he bothered his head about me, but he at once concentrated all his thoughts on the hay and feathers I gave him. In an incredibly short time they built a beautiful spherical nest in an elder bush, with a little round hole in the side, and warmly lined it with feathers, and then after a few evenings I missed Mrs. Zebra. I wondered where she had got to. I looked anxiously about and could see no sign of her, so concluded she must be in the nest, but, like a fool, I must make sure. So, like the celebrated Little Jack Horner, I put my finger into the pie. I had better not have done so; for she deserted incontinently.

There were four little white eggs in the nest, but what was the good if the hen would not sit on them? I couldn't, with the best will in the world. As soon as the cock saw his wife hopping gaily about, and giving no sort of heed to the family concerns, he gazed at her silently in mild surprise, as the gentleman in the poem at the peak of Darien; but after a few moments of gazing, he seemed to drop to it that "som'nt" was wrong, and he went for her like a little fury, and gave her a right good thrashing. It, however, did no sort of good, as she would not go near the nest, and after a time he evidently came to the conclusion that it was a bad job. For a few days they lived a gay and frivolous life, chasing each other about all over the aviary, evidently much to the surprise and disgust of the sober little Indigo Finch.

One morning I saw nest building going on apace in the same bush, and this time I had the sense to determine to leave things alone. Alas! I never had the opportunity of putting my good resolution into practice, for about three days after I saw the poor little hen sitting all of a heap on the floor and panting horribly; she was so helpless that she allowed me to pick her up in my hand. I had no idea what was the matter. Of course, she was egg-bound. I brought her in and put her in a little cage on the oven top, but, like "Little Jane" in Wordworth's very washy poem, only substituting cage for bed:—

In bed she moaning lay,
Till God relieved her of her pain,
And then she went away.

Hints on Hybrid Breeding with Bullfinch Hens.

By THOMAS SMITH.

Having bred two Crystal Palace Greenfinch-Bullfinch Hybrids, I am often appealed to for advice on the breeding of that most charming of all exhibits, the Hybrid, hence this article, which I hope will be helpful in the hatching and rearing of winning Hybrids from the many Siberian hen Bullies which have found their way into the various bird-rooms in the United Kingdom.

Speaking from my own experience, I find the Siberian Bullfinch hen possesses a good constitution, and with ordinary attention can easily be kept in condition. The Siberian is larger than the British Bullfinch hen, but she is equally active, and should be housed all the year round in a large cage, which should be placed where daylight strikes in—the latter is an inducement to take exercise. If caged off with a Canary, Goldfinch, Greenfinch, or Redpoll in the latter part of spring, she mates readily, and invariably forms such a warm attachment that during the breeding season it will not be displaced, if her husband is removed, and a substitute put into her cage; she is apt to attack the intruder and compel him to keep himself in the bottom of the cage. Even the oft-times savage Greenfinch cock has to keep out of her way.

The Beginning.

It is usually well on in May, or even the month of June, before she attempts to nest. She begins suddenly by picking up tiny twigs and fine rootlets, which should be scattered in the bottom of the cage, with a plentiful supply of dried moss. The nest-box, or platform, should be fixed as high up as possible, and should be shaded with green fir or other twigs. She constructs a cosy nest, and into which the average hen will deposit her eggs.

In the choice of a Canary for a mate, a large finely-built bird, with green blood in it, and full of vitality, should be selected. Placed in the same cage in November, December, or January, the two become close friends. No difficulty need be anticipated; all the owner requires to do is to supply wholesome food and wait patiently. Patience is requisite, as the ordinary breeding season (that is, with Canaries) will usually be well advanced before a single egg is laid.

Different Dispositions.

The Greenfinch at first is somewhat shy. He is inclined to be pugnacious, too, but once mated, the couple are inseparable, and breed very freely. On one occasion, from a pair I had six Hybrids reared, besides fertile eggs which had "gone back."

The Goldfinch, with his charming, winning ways, very soon becomes attached to the Bullfinch hen, and breeds with her freely also. They agree well, and fertile eggs are by no means uncommon.

The Redpoll is the most difficult to get to fertilize eggs. He takes up with the hen Bullie more freely than any of the others, being most kind and attentive in feeding her. He works hard all the season, but does not seem to be so capable of producing fertilized eggs with the Bullfinch for a mate. The Redpoll-Bullfinch is the rarest of the Bullfinch Hybrids, and is, on that account, coupled with his attractiveness, highly prized, and much sought after.

Up till a couple of years or so ago the Canary-Bullie Hybrid was almost unknown, but during the last two exhibition seasons, he has been much in evidence at the leading shows in England and Scotland.

The Importance of Foster Mothers.

When Bullfinch hens, either Siberian or British, take to laying eggs, they are very prolific, forty eggs being got in some cases in a single season. No fancier need expect success unless he has a large stock of feeding pairs ready to test the Bullfinch eggs, and, where fertile, to hatch and rear the young. A Hybrid is easily reared, but like every other young bird, it seldom thrives in the nest if alone. Hence the wisdom of having other eggs (Canary eggs will do) set on the same day. Where there are even two youngsters in the nest they grow and develop speedily.

The Hybrid bred from the Bullfinch is, in my opinion, the most fascinating of all exhibition birds. The one, and the only drawback, is that it cannot be used in breeding; the outstanding qualities pass away with the possessor, which is a pity. If their excellent qualities could be transmitted to young from them, then the Hybrid would beyond doubt be the most popular of all cage birds. As it is, he is deservedly popular, takes to colour-feeding without trouble, and requires no "touching up"—like the lily, it is perfect and very pleasing to the eye.

The Method of Feeding.

There can be no gainsaying that it is an advantage to give Bullfinches as nearly as possible the food they are accustomed to when in their wild state. Breeders who have a garden can without much difficulty minister to their natural tastes, and give fresh supplies daily. It is different, however, with the town breeder; he has to depend upon an occasional run into the country for green food. My experience is that Hybrid pairs do very well if treated in the matter of food in the same way as a pair of Canaries. Greenfinches and Bullfinches are passionately fond of the buds and tender leaves of the common hawthorn, which have always provided my start in the way of green-food.

So soon as the leaf becomes strong, I turn to the dandelion, both root and tender blade, until the flower comes into season. I clip off the white down, and put a dozen heads into the cage; nothing, in my opinion, brings Hybrid couples forward more rapidly. I also supply egg and biscuit mixture, and Canary seed, with a little rape seed, and about a dozen sun-flower seeds per diem.

Don't Force the Hens Too Much.

On the Bullfinch taking to the nest, I discontinue the egg-mixture and green-food. By doing so, I find the hen is likely to be more contented to sit, and not rush on laying eggs, which too many Bullfinch hens do, to their own detriment. I prefer a Bullie hen that takes a fortnight in the nest; such a one is likely to last two or three seasons, which is a benefit when one gets a good breeding hen—I mean by that, a reliable layer, and one from whom fertile eggs are obtained.

As indicated already, I depend upon common Canary pairs for rearing, and treat them in relation to food precisely in the same way as if the pair were rearing Canaries. Upon the egg and biscuit mixture, and the usual green-foods, the youngsters thrive admirably. Young Hybrids, if healthy, can usually fend for themselves at about the age of five weeks; once at that age they give little trouble.

Being strong on the wing, young Hybrids are apt to injure themselves dashing about the cage, so a likely show specimen should be housed in a large box cage, wired only at the front. They are of a wild nature, and should be "tamed" until they become quite steady, as only the latter fits them for the show bench. A steady bird, all other things being equal, will win against an unsteady Hybrid—one which goes bounding about the cage when approached. In conclusion, I may say that I consider a fully developed Hybrid, with its bright, shining colours, quite as attractive an exhibit as any that can be found among the British birds on the show-bench.

THE BREEDING OF WINNING NORWICH PLAINHEADS.

By R. TAYLOR.

When the young are about eight weeks old, I commence adding a little colour-food to the egg and bread—only a sprinkling for a start. Increase this until you get two parts colour-feed to three parts egg and bread, also a spoonful of sugar. When my birds are well on the feed I take their seed boxes off at breakfast time and return them at about tea time every day during the moult. I have heard fanciers say they can't get their birds to eat enough to be able to get the colour good enough; perhaps some of you have thought the same. Well, you must make them eat it the same as I do.

There is one thing I would like to impress on your minds, and that is to keep on feeding a bird for as long as you can see a pen feather. This is just where a lot of fanciers make a great mistake. A bird generally should finish about the head, and this is where a bird shows its colour. So keep at it until it is finished, and gradually leave it off, until the seed-boxes are left on altogether.

Concerning Colour-feeding.

Speaking about colour-feeding brings back to my mind what I have thought of scores of times, viz., that it is expensive; also I am certain it does the birds more harm than good, and what is more, it is the cause of more grumbling amongst Norwich fanciers than anything else I knew of. For instance, how often one sees an inferior bird standing before a better one! As a rule you don't need to look twice for the reason; it is the colour. I have seen it many a time myself, and I have wondered how on earth the judge could possibly get them there, considering only ten points are allowed for colour. I think the time is not far distant when this artificial, unnecessary, and injurious practice will be discouraged; and I think it is the duty of every Norwich fancier to give a helping hand and push this matter on.

A Plea for Natural Colour.

The Norwich Plainhead Club allows natural colour class winners to count for cup; but this is not enough. We want more classes, and now that the show season is over, and we have some eight or nine months before it comes round again, I think that if all societies who have a member on the N.P.C. committee, would ask them to use their influence in the matter, things might be different next show season. I know there are a lot of fanciers who would like to see a change, and would like to express their feelings on the matter in the Press. Only there is a class of people who seem to take a delight in rushing into print when they see anything they do not (or may not be able to) appreciate, and will "tear a fancier to pieces," and that nearly always under a nom de plume. They are not all disappointed exhibitors who have anything to say; personally, I feel very strongly against colour-feeding, and I am not a disappointed exhibitor, as I have got above my share this last season; but I do really think we should have better birds, and better filled classes, and that it would bring other fanciers into the ranks who don't like colour-feeding. What is more, we should get our birds judged better, and with less grumbling.

There is one thing I forgot to mention; I refer to the nesting material. I have tried wood boxes and moss and cow-hair, also nest pans, and felt linings. I have discarded the boxes and moss altogether now in favour of the pans and felt linings. I have brought some of these with me, and will show you how I cut them out. You fix them in with a little flour and water. In conclusion, allow me to thank you for your kind attention, and that you will turn out a few champions in the forthcoming breeding season is the worst wish of your humble servant.

There was a good company of members present to listen to the lecture, which was greatly enjoyed. Questions were invited, and were ably answered by Mr. Taylor. He also showed how to make a felt lining fit in a nest, which was much appreciated. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Taylor brought the meeting to a close.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

With the Rooks.

Throughout Great Britain one of the most common sights in the way of bird life is a large flock of Rooks feeding upon marshland, hillside and valley, and there are few districts without their Rookeries, either newly formed or of ancient date. One peculiarity of these familiar birds is that always and all the year round they are found in flocks, for although during the breeding season the adult birds will frequently forage alone for the benefit of the callow brood, they are still living in harmony with their fellows. Rooks are not at all unsociable, and may frequently be seen during the winter months feeding in company with Plovers, Gulls, etc., and in this district quite a number of Jackdaws live sociably with them. But during the early summer months the 'daws separate from the flocks and nest in pairs among the old trees so plentiful round the village. When Rooks have once taken to a nesting site, it is seldom they leave it; and if they are carefully watched for a number of years, one will find that the nests generally increase, although in some cases there is considerable fluctuation. As a case in point, on a small scale, four seasons ago, three nests were built in some fine old trees to the west of the village. The following season these increased to five and then to seven, so that there was every prospect of a fine rookery being formed in a few years. But this season has seen a complete change, and only one nest remains. The others were sadly wrecked by the winter's gales, and now not a twig remains to mark the spot. Possibly the owners have taken them to form the foundation for new houses elsewhere. It may be they have joined the flock dwelling in the old trees in the Convent grounds, for although I have not counted them, there appears to be a considerable increase in the number of nests occupied this season. In both these places, and, in fact, all round the village these birds are in no way disturbed. There is, for instance, no young Rook shooting, and there is no robbing of nests, so that the birds should quickly multiply. And yet there does not appear to be much difference in the size of the flocks seen about.

Unusual Building Site.

The Long-tailed Tit has been known to so far depart from its usual habit of suspending its beautiful home among the branches of trees or bushes as to build it against the trunk of a tree joining it to the rough bark by cobwebs and vegetable fibres.

Too Big to Manage.

Birds do not appear to be able to measure the size of anything by sight. As an instance, Starlings and Jackdaws will frequently try to get a stick or some rubbish into the nesting hole much too big for it; and Herons, Water Rails, and Dabchicks, have been found choked to death by attempting to swallow fish much too large for them to manage.

The St. Kilda Wren.

The Wren frequenting the St. Kilda Islands, the most northern point of Great Britain, although very closely related to our own common Wren and the Wrens living in Norway, is still distinct from them. It resides there all the year round, frequenting the rocks and boulders of these rough islands. The song is said to be louder and clearer, and the eggs larger, than those of our more familiar bird. The bird itself is larger with stronger legs and feet, is paler in ground colour, but is more distinctly barred.

Peewit's Eggs.

The collecting of the Green Plovers' eggs is quite a business, and regularly each season a quantity is sent to the London market. Although some thousands of these delicacies are consumed annually, there is no fear of the species becoming scarce or extinct. The nests and eggs are not by any means easy to locate, and numbers of young birds are reared each year. In certain localities during the winter flocks may be seen of enormous size, mostly feeding on the marsh lands and open water meadows, where they are most difficult to approach. Undoubtedly the Peewit is one of the most useful birds we possess, as he feeds almost exclusively upon grubs and insects harmful to the growing crops.

To breed Budgerigars successfully you must have the "Improved Secure" Husks because they don't fall to pieces when in use as others do. They remain unequalled, and are different to any others. Individual testimonials don't count for much, so listen to what experts say:—"Cage Birds" says they are "far superior to the old husks." "Feathered World" says: "Undoubtedly, the new husks are very superior to the old." Again "Exchange and Mart" says: "You had better order the improved form; even if it is a little dearer than the old-fashioned sort, it is cheaper in the long run." "Fur and Feather" tells its correspondents: "They have distinct advantages over the old sort." "Poultry" has said: "For Budgerigars we advise the use of the improved style of husks." Surely these are convincing testimonials. They are 4/6 dozen; smaller quantities, 5d. each. Interesting pamphlet, entitled "Budgerigar Breeding," free on application. Superior box nests for Cockatiels, etc., 1/6. Send for the pamphlet now.

DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers in all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insistedupon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

MAY I POINT

out to you that the Roller Canary season is now almost over, and unless you order within next few days, you may be too late to get a really first-class bird at any price. I know there must be still a few persons in England who have not yet tried one of my Leipzig Rollers, and they are the persons I ask to read this and the advertisements of others on this page. I claim to be the largest retailer of Roller Canaries in British Isles, the only importer of Hans Weber's Leipzig Rollers, and to supply far better birds than can be obtained elsewhere at much higher prices. My Rollers have repeatedly been tested (at my request), against birds costing more money from others, and I frequently receive and sometimes publish letters saying my Rollers have beaten birds costing twice and three times the money as mine do. You can easily prove this to your own satisfaction, as I send all on full week's trial, at my own risk, either on receipt of cash or CAGE BIRDS deposit system, and cordially invite comparison and practical tests against any other Rollers. I have a grand stock of these pure Leipzig Rollers, all in full song, day and gaslight, with long hollow double rolls, sweet silvery trills, water-bubble runs, soft roulades, piccolo trills, deep bass rolls, hollow bell rolls, Nightingale jug-jug bell harp, flute notes, etc., etc., and are warranted to be quite free from Titlark or any other harsh notes. Price 6/6, and 7/6; special Bandmasters, 10/- and 12/6 each; pure Leipzig hens 3/- each, 5/- couple. Also a few premier Seifert contest masters, in full song, 15/-, 17/6, and 21/- each. Pure Seifert hens 4/- each, or 4 for 12/-. As a special inducement to novices, I am offering a few pairs of Seifert Rollers, cock and hen, properly matched and mated, and fit for immediate breeding, at 15/- per pair, but only one pair will be supplied to each applicant at this price. Roller breeding cages, with loose fronts, 2/6 and 3/- each; double ditto, 4/6 each, Roller singing box cages 1/-, 1/2, 1/4, and 1/6 each. Special Roller cabinet cages, with folding doors, 2/6 each. Kindly notice that most of the letters given below specially mention the result of testing my birds with those obtained from elsewhere. Full name and address given with each, so that sceptical persons can make fullest enquiries. "R. A. Mess, The Citadel, Plymouth. March 23rd.—Sir,—The Roller I purchased from you arrived in pink of condition, quite fresh and healthy, securely packed and without injuries. Everybody simply admires it. A beautiful songster.—Yours, W. Osborne." "171, Middleton Street, Alexandria, Dumbartonshire. March 23rd.—Sir,—Many thanks for Leipzig Roller. I am highly delighted with the bird, and allow me to note how careful you packed it for such a long journey. Please send following.—Yours, Allan McKinlay." "46, Foxhall Road, Blackpool. March 24th.—Sir,—I am delighted with all four Rollers, they are singing splendidly. I think them very cheap in comparison to those I have heard, which cost 12/6. I have a friend who gave 12/6 for one, and he says himself that mine are better birds.—Yours, A. Mitchell." "29, Clifford Road, West Stanley. March 25th.—Sir,—I now have five of your birds, and am highly pleased with them. I have had Norwich, Yorkshires, Mules, Goldfinches, and Linnets, but your birds fairly take the cake for song. When I want any more, you are the man; I have got good value for my money, and straightforward, honest dealing.—Yours, Wm. Roe." "13, Norris Street, Lincoln. March 29th.—Sir,—The three Rollers give me the greatest satisfaction. The Schoolmaster (at 10/-) is a grand bird, and well worth the money. He is a splendid songster, and as good as one I gave 15/- for from ——. —Yours, J. Cheetham." "35, St. Stephen's-rd., Sheffield, March 29th.—Sir,—Please send following. The Leipzig Roller I had from you is singing wonderful.—Yours, J. Marshall." "Mr. Marshall again writes on March 31st:—Sir,—Bird arrived safe this morning, and gives every satisfaction. The cock I had last week sings splendid. I am pleased to see I have got hold of a fellow like you, as I have been done with other dealers. Your birds recommend themselves.—Yours, J. Marshall." "King-st., Odiham, Hants, March 31st.—Sir,—Please send following. I may add that I am extremely pleased with your methods of doing business, which are far in advance of others I have dealt with.—Yours, Geo. Sutherland." "138, Ahaa-st, Cwmfillery, April 2nd.—Sir,—Received Roller, and am highly pleased with it. He was singing in station and on the main street, and has been singing day and night ever since. I must say you are the most straightforward man I ever dealt with. I have sent money to men and had a lot of trouble with them, so shall deal with you only in future.—Yours, Wm. Coles, ex-constable." Kindly note you have a full week's trial with my birds, and all your money back if you don't like them. I don't care how hard you are to please, I guarantee to do so. No matter what coloured birds you want, I will pick it out for you; but don't delay your orders, as stock will soon be gone, and then I cannot supply you at any price until October next. One trial solicited just to prove to you that I make good my statements.

THE CANARY AND ITS GENERAL MANAGEMENT.

A Lecture recently delivered before the Lewisham and District Cage Bird Society.

After the general business of the society had been gone through, during the course of which five new members were elected, Mr. J. Robson gave a lecture on the "Canary and its General Management" to the members, a great number of whom were present, our club room being comfortably full.

I have been asked, said the lecturer, to make a few remarks on "The Canary and its General Management." This, I may say, is a very big subject, touching as it does everything connected with our feathered friends. I will give a few details as to the general management, and afterwards I shall be pleased to answer any questions that the members present would like to ask. The first point is the housing of our birds. It is essential that all birds, whether of the common or the higher class variety, should have a comfortable room or out-house —that is to say, they should be free from draughts and damp, and in a place possessing a good light. It has been said that birds do not require a lot of light, but this, in my experience, is a fallacy. I have known birds that have been kept in a dark place, fall off the perch in a fit, when brought quickly into a strong light, the reason being that the heart gets affected when they are kept in the dark.

After the quarters of the birds have been suitably arranged, the next step is to select the type of bird one intends to keep. It is a great mistake (and this applies to novices especially) to keep more than one or two varieties at the beginning. Pick out the variety you fancy and get it as near to perfection as possible, and then, if you feel disposed, add another variety, and so on; but master one at a time. A good plan is to hang the picture of a typical bird in your room, and when pairing, pair your birds with the object of getting as near as possible to the bird represented by the picture. This, of course, takes time, and it is not to be expected that first-class birds are going to be bred at once. It may take three or four or even six years before this end is attained. It is for this reason that a close study of the variety is essential.

Some Fallacies.

I have known breeders to say, when pairing their birds, "Well, this is a yellow and that's a buff." Now, that is not the way to breed exhibition birds. When pairing study your birds well, and if you see any fault in one, pair the bird to another that has not that fault, and so on; and if you cannot see in your own room exactly the bird you think would be best, try a fellow breeder's birds. I have heard people say, when a big breeder is clearing out his surplus stock, that the birds are no good, etc., but this is not always the case. Any big breeder who has any luck at all must clear out some of his birds to make room for the next season; it stands to reason that he cannot keep all his birds. I do not say he sells his best birds—he certainly does not—but you will in all probability find among those that he is clearing out something that you want, and no doubt could get at a reasonable price. With regard to feeding: this subject has been so much discussed, that I need hardly touch on it. I use Canary seed as the staple diet, with rape, niger, and gold of pleasure as tit bits.

The next point to deal with is the cage. This should be as cosy as possible, as of course it is the permanent home of the birds. The cage I like and the one which I recommend is the box pattern type, with wire fronts. The joints of the woodwork should be glued, and the whole nicely enamelled both inside and out. By having the cages made in this way you keep down as much as possible that pest of all fanciers, "Redmite." I do not mean to say that the mere fact of having cages made like this will keep them down without proper attention; of course each cage should be washed out now and again with some disinfectant. Personally I prefer carbolic. I have heard breeders say that the more redmite you have and the more your nests are infested the more young you will have and the better your birds will get on. This, again, is a fallacy. My experience is that the more you keep this blood-sucking pest under the better the birds, both young and old, will get on. This is a matter of common sense. The hen is feeding her young all day, and at night time, when she should be resting, she is irritated and worried by the redmite, the result being that she gets no rest at all, and in consequence when the day breaks, instead of hopping off the nest as sprightly as possible to attend to the wants of her young, she has to fairly drag herself off, and is not too lazy but too weak to attend to them properly. The same applies to the young, instead of their progressing as they should and making up into fine, healthy birds, we get puny, sickly looking birds, and this simply because when young in the nest they have had practically all their blood sucked out of them by redmite.

While speaking of cages, I must mention that all birds of position, such as the Yorkshire Canary, should have much more room between the perch and the top of the cage than those of the Norwich type. For this reason, being birds of position it is necessary for them to stand up well, and if kept in cages that are not of the proper height from perch to roof, they crouch, and once they have this fault, no amount of training will make them stand as they should. With the Norwich Canary and birds of that type (which should stand well across the perch), so high a cage should not be used.

With regard to the exhibitions; all birds should be got thoroughly used to their show cages, as birds that carry themselves well and show themselves off to the best advantage are sure to get noticed more than those that fly on to the cage wires and will not keep still. The judge then has no chance of seeing a bird's good points no matter how excellent they may be, if it is on the cage wires during half the time and flying round during the other half. I could mention cases where I have had to stand at least 2 yards away from Yorkshires when judging, for the simple reason that the birds have been too nervous and not enough used to their show cages. I have also known of good birds that have got hung up and broken a wing or a leg through nervousness. The simplest way to get birds used to show cages is to hang one of these cages in front of the stock cage, so that they can go in and out as often as they like.

The Discussion.

In the discussion which followed Mr. Scott asked: Of what good is gold of pleasure seed to Canaries.—It acts as a stimulant, increasing the action of the organs of the body, and like niger should be given judiciously. If niger were given to hens from now until the first clutch of eggs is laid, very few cases of egg-binding would be heard of. It is also good for the cock birds, but should not be given in such large quantities, a little about twice a week being very beneficial.—Mr. Jordan showed some seed, which one of his birds had cracked and dropped (husk and seed together), and asked Mr. Robson's opinion as to the cause.—Your bird evidently requires a little stimulant, such as Gentian. It has been remarked that some of the drugs I suggest are very objectionable to take, but in some cases it is necessary to be cruel in order to be kind. Gentian is one of the best drugs I know of; use from five to ten drops in the water.

Mr. Steed: Do you think petrolcum is good for killing redmite?—It is not so good as carbolic, as it does not kill so quickly. I have seen redmite run about in the former for quite a long time, but carbolic kills them at once.—Mr. Pallett: Do you think turps kills them, and does it have any effect on the birds?—Certainly; and the birds will not touch it if it is used properly, that is to say, with moderation.

Mr. Lugg: Did I understand you to say that it was not advisable to keep common hens with better class birds?—No! I pointed out that common hens and feeding hens should have the same attention as show birds, but in no case should they be killed by kindness.

Mr. Pallett: I have a bird which, after eating its seed, throws it up again in small pieces, with a lot of moisture. Can you tell me the reason? The bird is rather an old one.—That may account for it. I should give him a slight stimulant, and also a little sweet apple, as this helps digestion and keeps the bird in good health.

Mr. Steed: Which do you think is the best to cover cage bottoms with—sand or sawdust? —I have used sand for about 20 years and sawdust for about the same time, but I should never use sand again. Sawdust, that is, rough-cut pine dust, is a disinfectant and absorbs the moisture much better than sand. Of course the birds must have sand, as it is necessary for their well being. I use sawdust to cover the trays and a small vessel containing sand inside the cage. Some people say that the birds eat the sawdust, but this is a mistake; they may peck amongst it, but certainly do not eat it, that is, if they are fed properly.

A hearty vote of thanks to the lecturer brought a very enjoyable meeting to a close.—GEO. H. PHILLIPS, hon. secretary pro tem.

DULWICH & PECKHAM C.B.S.

A good number of members and friends met at headquarters on April 1st to hear a lecture by Mr. Robson, entitled "Canary-breeding as a Hobby." Mr. H. E. Tringham was in the chair. The lecturer received a splendid reception, and said that it always afforded him very great pleasure to be with the Dulwich and Peckham members. He drew some very vivid pictures of the joys and disappointments of Canary breeding. He spoke for over an hour. A great many present took the opportunity offered of asking questions and gaining information. Many interesting topics arose out of these questions, the most important being that of "inbreeding and selection." The lecturer, getting very warm on this subject, gave his audience many facts and proofs that ought to make them consider before proceeding far with inbreeding. The question of cinnamon blood also raised a very animated discussion. Mr. E. S. Lugg proposed a hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Robson, which was seconded by Mr. Jay, and carried unanimously. Mr. Robson briefly replied. Mr. Cole then proposed a hearty vote of thanks to the chairman, which was seconded by Mr. Goodwin and carried with applause. Mr. Tringham replied, and the meeting then closed.—W. HODSON, Hon. Sec.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CINNAMON BORDER FANCIES AND THEIR COLOUR.

SIR,—Having noticed the correspondence going on in your columns in reference to the Cinnamon Border and its colour, I beg to tender my mite of information regarding same. In the year 1885—24 years ago—at Hawick Show, in the Green or Cinnamon class, were 24 entries, made up of 7 Cinnamon cocks, 2 Cinnamon hens, 10 Green cocks, and 5 Green hens. First prize, Cinnamon cock; second prize, Green cock; third prize, Cinnamon hen; fourth prize, Green cock; fifth prize, Cinnamon cock; sixth prize, Green hen; seventh prize, Green cock. In the year 1886, with 17 in class, were 6 Cinnamon cocks and 2 Cinnamon hens, the rest being Green cocks and hens. Surely the above goes to show that there were far more Cinnamons bred in those days, and far more cocks than hens; also, this was before the days of colour-feeding of any kind in Scotland—ne cayenne or cheese dye in those days! Being present at the above shows, I am quite sure the colour was as good then as it is now. About the same dates I judged Greenlaw Show two years in succession and find, by my judging book, that the Cinnamon Border was winning there (and cocks) both years amongst Greens. About 30 years ago, or over, in mixed classes, the Border, or common Canary, had to compete against Norwich, Lizards, and Mules, and the common Cinnamon was often in the money. Having many hundreds of old catalogues, I should be pleased to let any reasonable fancier see them. I wish CAGE BIRDS every success, which it certainly deserves.

JAMES ALEXANDER.

SIR,—At a show held here (Whitehaven) in November, 1891, nearly 18 years ago, I exhibited a very nice little self Yellow Cinnamon cock in the 10s. 6d. selling class, no provision being made for Cinnamon coloured birds in the 5 classes given for what were then scheduled as "Cumberland Fancy." The judge for the Cumberland Fancy, likewise the selling classes, was Mr. J. Shepherd (Whitehaven), who, previous to this time, was a prominent exhibitor of Norwich and Cinnamons, and who gave the bird I exhibited 1st prize in a mixed class of 27 entries. It was claimed at the show and bought for 17s. by the late Mr. J. Peel, Wigton, who was then breeding and exhibiting Cumberland Fancies. In a conversation I had with him some time afterwards, he told me he succeeded in picking up several prizes in Scotland with the bird, presumably in Green or Cinnamon classes. It is a long way to carry your mind's eye back to 1891, but many a time these last two or three seasons have I fervently wished I could have one or two like the bird I had then.

JOS. B. MOORE.

HOW I KEEP AND FEED MY GOLDFINCHES.

SIR,—In this bird I think we have one of the handsomest of our Britishers, and one that is easily steadied, if we can only get it used to cage life, and on to hard seed, as, unfortunately, a great many of them die when fresh caught. Being late breeders, the birds are caught whilst very young. The best time for buying these birds I find is from October till January, and especially when they have been caught after a few days' hard frost. I find that a box cage is best for them, as if kept in a wire cage they are always climbing up the wires, and they very soon have the "twist," which makes one's own neck ache to watch them. When they have this, I find that the raising of the top perch so the bird cannot reach backward is the best cure, as the birds always get on the top perch to perform this trick. When you have bought these birds, always give them plenty of inga seed for the first, and gradually wean them off it, as this is the seed which some keep them alive on. There are a great many who think that when a fresh-caught Goldfinch goes "thick" it is that its oil gland (which is on the rump) gets too full of oil, and they accordingly start pricking it, to burst it. But to do this only hastens the end of the bird. The best thing for fresh-caught birds is to get them to eat mealworms, or gather some thistle seed, with worms in them, and give them to the birds. The Goldfinch is a hard bird for the beginner to sex, but a good way of picking them out is to catch a bird and look at the black around the root of the bill; if it is of a greyish colour it is a hen, if of a jet black it will be a cock, for this is a place where birds cannot be easily faked. I think the Goldie is one of the easiest birds to steady, for it does not seem to be of a very wild nature. When a flock is feeding you can get quite close to the birds, and when disturbed they will only fly a few yards away. I feed those birds as follows:—1lb. Spanish Canary, ¼lb. hemp, ¼lb. teazel, ¼lb. inga, 2ozs. linseed, and (when the birds are moulting) small sunflower seeds. As a tit-bit I give thistle seed, hardheads, and dandelion seed, and they are very fond of young dandelion leaves.

A NEW CAGE BIRD SOCIETY FOR LINCOLN & DISTRICT.

SIR,—A meeting of the cage bird fanciers was held on April 1 at Hatton's Dining Rooms, the Arcade, Lincoln, when it was decided to form a Cage Bird Society. There were 25 enthusiastic fanciers present, and the business proceedings were of a pleasant and friendly character. Mr. C. Pickering (one of the oldest fanciers in Lincoln) opened the meeting with a few well chosen remarks. He went on to say how pleased he was to meet the fanciers present. It was, he said, the first time an attempt had been made to form a Cage Bird Society in Lincoln. He was sure it was a step in the right direction, and hoped that in time a good and reliable society would be inaugurated. The business for the evening was then proceeded with. It was decided that the society should be called the Lincoln and District Cage Bird Society, the membership of which would be limited to fanciers residing within a six-mile radius of Lincoln. This area may probably be extended at some future date, but it was thought better to restrict it as stated for the present. Headquarters of the society, Hatton's Dining Rooms, The Arcade. Meetings to be held first Thursday in ever month; the next meeting to take place on May 6th at 8 o'clock. Subscription, 2s. 6d. per annum. The officials elected at the meeting were as follows:—Committee, Mr. C. Pickering (chairman), Mr. G. Boucher (vice-chairman), Messrs. C. Jeffries, A. Johnson, R. Sands, F. Moore, C. Priestley, and G. Pleasance; treasurer, Mr. J. W. Lawson; hon. secretary, Mr. O. Heath, 81, Burton Road, Lincoln. Total membership up-to-date, 30 (which we hope will greatly increase in due course). The society has decided to hold a Members' First Feather Show in July next, the date of which is not yet fixed.

O. HEATH, Hon. Secretary.

THE POMP OF SPRING.

SIR,—Having sent you a few lines last year, I thought a like memento of the advent of Spring this year would be as welcome as the last. On the 21st of March we once again entered on the most delightful season of the year, and a time when everything moves and makes itself noticeable; and from now, and for many weeks to come, we shall look forward to more genial days. In this season of the year we look forward to the blasts of winter being replaced by the balmy air and gentle breezes so refreshing in the early mornings as you take a country walk. The orchards and gardens, with their varied assortments of fruit trees, now break forth from their sleep into a most charming fairyland of blossoms in tints of beautiful red, pink, and white, these blossoms being inoculated by the gentle breezes that carry the pollen from the male to the female flowers. The bees also assist in the inoculation, for round these great clusters of bloom thousands of bees are constantly working till the petals are dropped. Round the ponds and hedges the various insects are noted to be daily increasing, and in the duck pool the jelly-like spawn of the frog becomes more distinct in the yolk day by day. On the lawns and in the meadows the daisy and buttercup show their innocent heads. In the woodlands we find such sweet flowers as the daffodil, the bluebell and the primrose blooming under the shado of the pretty pink, cone-like flowers of the larch. Round the skirts of these delightful spots many young rabbits are already at play skipping and jumping about to the delight of their mothers. The golden sun rises earlier every morning out of an eastern sea, and sets at evening tide behind the purple mountain peaks of the west. In nearly every district the Rooks are settled to nest, and in some instances are already feeding their young. The whole of the countryside rings with the love songs of innumerable happy resident birds. The coming over vast tracks of sea and land of millions of little Warblers, Swallows and Martins to visit our shores again, and spend our only too short Spring and Summer, has begun, and they are filling the air with sweet songs of joy, ever apparently happy and contented. Let come what will: all these and a hundred and one other things besides tell us that Spring has come, and every man, woman and child should rise and appreciate it.

A Few Hints to Intending Competitors.

1.—Always keep a copy of "C.B." in your pocket, and ask all your acquaintances who keep pet cage-birds of any kind: "Have you seen CAGE BIRDS?" If they say: "No," ask them, as a favour to you, to look through the copy in your possession, and then get them to write their full names and addresses in one of the spaces between the "rungs" of your ladder.
2.—Ascertain the names and addresses of all cage-bird keepers in your vicinity; then send each one in turn your copy of CAGE BIRDS, with your compliments, and ask them to attach their signature for their own benefit as well as yours.
3.—You can, if you choose, share the postcards received with the persons signing.
4.—Take your CAGE BIRDS to any shows, meetings, etc., which may be held in your neighbourhood, and there find out anyone whose name and address can be useful to you.
5.—If you are a cyclist take a run round the neighbourhood with your copy of "C.B.," and look up all the keepers of pet birds.
6.—It is not necessary for the persons signing to be exhibitors of birds, or even breeders, but they must be persons who keep cage-birds — it is our object to endeavour to stimulate the interest of all who keep pet birds, and provide them with a fuller insight into the hobby, so that they may take it up in a wider form.

I wrote to you some time since for a copy of your paper, CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. S. L. Stroud (Tunbridge Wells), and ever since its receipt I have taken it in regularly to my pleasure and help.

I have only just begun taking in your paper, CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. G. W. Roach (Walthamstow). I like it very much indeed, and intend taking it in regularly instead of another one I have been in the habit of having.

Mr. D. Evans, of Gwm, Glamorgan, is requested to send his full address to Mr. A. B. Bishop (30, Stuart Road, Walton, Liverpool), so that his order may be executed, as letters have been returned marked "cannot be found."

We are to have a paper by Mr. King at our next meeting, write Messrs. Whiteley and Hornby, hon. secretaries Kirkstall and Dis C.B.S. This without doubt will be an excellent paper, and a good attendance is anticipated.

At the Dulwich and Peckham C.B.S. Young Bird Show, to be held in the Peckham Hall on July 1st next, writes Mr. W. Hodson, the hon. secretary, Mr. R. L. Crisp has consented to judge the Canaries and Mr. C. T. Maxwell the British birds.

We hear from the secretary, Mr. R. Binks, that the Perryhill and Dis. C.B.S. has under consideration the choosing of a fresh date on which to hold their open show, and that this will be announced later, after a special meeting has been held.

Owing to there being considerable business to get through at our last meeting, writes Mr. W. S. Negus, secretary of the Cardiff and Dis. C.B.S., Mr. Melhuish was unable to deliver his lecture as announced. He will give it at our next meeting on April 15th.

I have been a reader of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, since the first issue, and I look for it the first thing every Friday morning, and will not be without it whilst I have a penny to spare for same. I wish it yet further success.—J. SHARP (Sheffield).

Messrs. C. Campbell (Glasgow), and D. Ross (Forres), writes Mr. A. Thomson, secretary of the Woodside and Bucksburn O.S., have been engaged to judge the Norwich and the Crest, Cinnamon, Green, and wild bird classes respectively at our show on November 20th.

The list of my recent foreign orders, all within the past fortnight, includes, writes Mr. Rudd, the noted bird specialist, of Norwich, various breeds of Canaries to India, Spain, Madeira, Trinidad, Jamaica, and Gibraltar, and consignments of goods to Burma and Canada.

Mr. J. C. Barnes (Sheffield), has, we hear, been appointed to judge at the following shows: Bolton October 15th, Liverpool November 5th, Pendleton and Salford November 19th, Whitby November 24th, Sale November 26th, Ilkeston November 27th, and Guisborough January 1st.

Canary Breeding for Beginners - - Post Free 7d.

By Claude St. John.

A practical, up-to-date guide to the cult of Canary breeding, designed specially for the use of the beginner in the hobby. It contains many helpful illustrations, and deals very fully, and in an easily-understandable manner, with the choice, sexing and mating of the birds, feeding for condition, the cages and their fittings, the bird-room, egg-food, nest-building, rearing and moulting the young, colour-feeding, training for show, and all the details and difficulties likely to confront the breeder.

CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Kindly note my change of address, writes Mr. W. Reid, hon. secretary of the Sunderland C.B.A., from number 2 to number 14, Plantation Road, Pallion, Sunderland. You will be pleased to know that our society is now entirely free from debt, and that our prospects are very bright indeed.

We are holding our Nest Feather Show on July 10th, writes Mr. J. Richardson, the secretary of the Birkenhead C.F.A., when Mr. Hadwin, of Liverpool, will judge, and our Annual Old Show on November 20th, when Mr. Tams (Longton), will judge. Will local secretaries please note the dates to avoid clashing?

Will all secretaries of societies wishing the patronage of the Yorkshire Canary Club of Scotland, writes Mr. F. Bowman, hon. secretary, please write me before June 30th, stating the number of classes to be provided? I shall be pleased to give them full particulars. A silver medal will be given at each show where our patronage is given.

Kindly mention that if any exhibitors at the late show of the Preston O.S. have been overlooked in the matter of their specials, not having yet received them, writes Mr. R. Taylor, the secretary, I shall be glad if they will communicate with me. Our membership is open to all England, and anyone wishing to join the society in order to be able to compete for the Stanley Cup, value £25, should write me at Lime Kiln Inn, Preston.

In future all communications in connection with the Wallsend and Mid Tyne C.B.A., writes Mr. Jas. Johnston, should be addressed to Messrs. Richardson and Greenwell, 35, The Avenue, Wallsend-on-Tyne, who are now the joint secretaries of the society, as I have resigned that office, not having the necessary time at my disposal. But I am still secretary to the prize drawing committee, and will transact any business connected with it.

HOLIDAY NOTICE.

Owing to the Easter Holidays, the offices of "Cage Birds" will be closed from Friday to Monday next, inclusive.

Will Advertisers and Correspondents generally kindly note that all matter intended for next week's issue should be posted early, to reach us on Tuesday, April 13th, certain.

The April number of "British Birds" (one shilling monthly) contains a specially interesting article on Thomas Bewick (1753-1828) and George Montagu (1751-1815), being chapter 8 of the series, on "Some Early British Ornithologists and Their Works," by W. H. Mullens, M.A., LL.M., M.B.O.U. Mr. A. Landsborough Thomson writes on "Marking Birds: Notes on the Work at the Rossiter Station," and there are a large number of notes which go to complete another capital issue. There are also several excellent full-page plates

We have received from the hon. secretary, Mr. W. H. Uzzell, a copy of the rules of the newly-formed specialist club, the Midland Counties Y.C.C., from which we gather that the objects of the club are "the encouragement of the breeding, exhibiting, and extending the classification of the Yorkshire Canary, and to advance and protect the interests of Yorkshire fanciers in every direction." The subscription is 2s. 6d. with a nomination fee of 1s., and membership is open to all within the counties of Worcester, Warwick, Stafford, Northampton, Leicester, Nottingham, Derby, Huntingdon, Bedford, Salop, Radnor, Hereford, Rutland, and South Cheshire. The secretary's address is 76, Drayton Road, King's Heath Birmingham.

At a meeting of the Glasgow and West of Scotland N.B.B. and M.C., held March 25th, writes Mr. Fred Bowman, it was decided to hold our next Annual Open Show on November 12th and 13th. Mr. R. A. Brown being unable to again act as show secretary, owing to business reasons, I was unanimously elected in his stead. To guard against any loss, the members have come forward with a guarantee fund of between £20 and £30, which will be handed over to me previous to the show, so that English and Scottish fanciers alike should have every confidence in sending us a bumping entry and prove for themselves how much of the truth was contained in that now "famous concoction of a diseased mind," that was issued against the club previous to its last show.

A Reminder.

We may remind readers that this week we have had to go to press a day earlier than usual, so that any "copy" arriving after first post on Tuesday had to be held over until our next issue.

The Yorkshire Union.

The adjourned meeting of the Council will be held at the Market Tavern, Godwin Street, Bradford, on Saturday, April 10th, at 6 o'clock prompt. Business: Shows, judges, rules, etc.—S. DEAN, Hon. Sec.

For the Superstitious.

A curious story is being related referring to a gentleman who, having met with reverses in business at Stroud, Gloucestershire, went out to India and obtained a post on a plantation, leaving his wife and family in England, until he was in a position to send for them. One day when working on the plantation he rested for a short time with his hand on the handle of his spade. Whilst he was standing in this way a bird alighted on his hand. Naturally he was very surprised, and as he moved his hand the bird flew away. He proceeded with his work and forgot the incident. When the next mail from England arrived, however, it was painfully recalled to his memory. His wife had died unexpectedly, her death taking place not only on the same day, but at the very hour the bird perched upon his hand.

THE PAPER FOR RESULTS.

My sales, writes Mr. R. Hanford (Derby), have been splendid through my advertisements in CAGE BIRDS.

I am perfectly satisfied with what my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS has done for me writes Mr. Hugh Twist (Preston).

CAGE BIRDS I consider an excellent journal, both as a medium for advertisements and as a source of information.—R. L. BRUCE (Perth).

I am astonished at the results of my advertising in your paper, CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. J. C. Banks (Gt. Harwood), having sold all the birds I had for sale.

Kindly thank all who applied for my cock Budgerigar, writes Mr. W. Lidgett (Newark). The replies were too numerous for me to reply to all—only those who sent stamps. I had 19 replies in all.

Kindly take my advertisement out of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. J. Simmonds (Walsall), as I have completely "sold out" my Rollers. I had to disappoint some intending customers.

I have had quite a number of applications through my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. J. W. Kinder (Mossley), but it was quite impossible for me to reply to those who did not enclose stamps.

Please thank the numerous applicants who wrote in answer to my advertisement of Canaries in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. Wm. Dale (Swindon). It is impossible for me to reply to all.

I have had a large number of applications through my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS of last week's issue, writes Mr. Jas. Livingstone (Bathgate), but am only able to reply to those who sent stamps for same.

Your paper, CAGE BIRDS, beats all the others put together, writes Mr. J. T. Sapsford (Teddington). In fact it does not pay one to advertise in the others. I get answers from all over the globe by advertising in yours.

What a splendid advertising medium your paper, CAGE BIRDS, is! I had over two dozen replies to my small advertisement the other week, several by first post on the Saturday morning.—J. C. HALL (Corbridge-on-Tyne).

I could not possibly reply to all the applicants for the Muling pair which I advertised for sale in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. Alex. Thomson (Aberdeen), as I had so many applications. Your paper is a grand medium for advertising in.

I am pleased to say that I have disposed of all my stock through advertising in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. C. Pickup (Gt. Horton). So please stop my advertisement, as I cannot supply the orders that are coming in every day.

All my hen Bullies were sold, writes Mr. J. Fysh (Norfolk), through one advertisement in CAGE BIRDS. I have had to return four money orders and to reply to eight other applicants. The others, numbering fifteen, I take this opportunity of thanking.

Kindly thank all who answered my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS last week concerning a toy Pomeranian pup, writes Mr. W. G. Cooper (Carisbrooke), as they were far too numerous for me to answer personally. The pup was sold to a gentleman in Scotland.

Please stop my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS as I have sold all the birds I have to spare, writes Mr. T. Barfe (Pateley Bridge). The letters are pouring in daily from Ireland and all over—too numerous for me to answer; which shows the circulation of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS.

Kindly thank all who answered our advertisement in CAGE BIRDS respecting hen Bullfinches, write Messrs. Fairey and Goodwin (Kettering). It was impossible for us to reply to all as we had over 20 applications. We could have sold 50 more if we had had them. We wish CAGE BIRDS every success.

Owing to so many applying to me for my Greenie Canary Mule and Goldie Canary Mule last week, writes Mr. G. Edwards (Leominster), I could not reply to all who sent letters. Kindly thank them for me. Your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, is a great boon to fanciers, and I wish it good luck and success.

Is It Necessary to Colour-feed British Birds?

By CHARLES PRIOR.

The Discussion.

Mr. Goodchild: Will Mr. Prior tell us whether colour-food improves the colour of the beak and legs of the Chough and Blackbird?—Answer: That question raises an interesting point. In the case of the Chough, the legs and beaks are already naturally red in colour, and I have no doubt that generous feeding would reproduce that colour when the bird is kept in confinement. In the case of the Blackbird, we are accustomed to seeing Blackbirds on the show bench with the beak changed from crocus to red. If it is correct for a Blackbird to have a red beak, colour-feeding must be resorted to to produce it.

Mr. Wheller: Does Mr. Prior consider that the different foods in different districts have any effect upon the colouring of the birds?—No. In my experience I have found that you will find in any given district birds of every degree of excellence, both of size, colour, and type. I will go further, and say that it is possible to find these differences even in one nest.

Mr. Crisp: What does the lecturer mean by a generous diet?—I mean a highly varied diet. In the old days we were told to give Canary and rape; everything outside these being rank poison. The fact is, however, that you cannot give too much variety.

Feeding the Goldfinch.

Mr. Crisp: Will Mr. Prior tell us, for instance, how he feeds his Goldfinches?—Beginning from the very time of capture: I first place them in a quiet place, in what are called store cages. These cages are rather low and wide; say two feet long, six or seven inches high, and one foot wide. I like to have lots of about half-a-dozen birds together, for if only one starts eating the others are likely to soon follow his example. I sprinkle upon the floor of the cage pretty freely a mixture of equal bulk of linseed and teazel; and on top of this another sprinkling of niger seed and cracked hemp. They quickly start feeding, beginning with the niger as a rule, but sooner or later taking to the teazel, linseed, and hemp. This is to be their future staple seed mixture, with the addition of a little Canary seed, and it had best, perhaps, be their only food for the first winter of their captivity. When the spring comes, I add dandelion to their diet; first the leaves and then the seed heads. Groundsel also comes in at this time; and later there are knapweed and thistle, etc. These last two can be gathered, and stored through the winter. This is a rough outline of what I call a generous diet, and if a Goldfinch cannot thrive on this treatment he cannot thrive on any. If the list of foods can be added to, by all means do it.

Mr. Crisp: Does Mr. Prior consider it necessary to keep them out of doors?—No; I should not advise the cages to be always hung out in the open. In my experience the best method of keeping British birds is in cages, or flights, in an outside structure. That is how my own are kept. The structure faces the south-west, and is made snug by being closed to the north and east; these parts are further protected by being covered in with felt. The front is composed of glass and wire, and some portion is always open to the weather. Of course, in very severe weather the birds' water often freezes, but so long as the place is dry and not draughty, cold does not matter.

Mr. Curtis: Does Mr. Prior consider that a Wagtail is improved by being colour-fed?—That takes me rather out of my depth, as my remarks on colour-feeding generally are as applied to the Finches. I have no doubt, however, that given the requisite purity and richness of natural colour, a Wagtail needs no assistance in the way of colour-food. My view is, that it is needless to colour-feed any bird possessing good natural colour, and useless to colour-feed such as do not possess it.

Mr. Curtis: Would Mr. Prior tell us what brilliantine, or hair oil, or other preparation he uses to get the polish upon his Goldfinches?—I can answer that in two words—cold water.—Mr. Goodchild: Is that answer to be taken in a literal sense?—Yes.

Mr. Curtis: Has Mr. Prior ever seen a Canary-Bullfinch Hybrid in natural colour?—No. I cannot recall ever having seen a specimen of this cross in natural colour. Such a specimen would be of great interest. I would like to see one fed and moulted on lines similar to those which are suitable for the Bullfinch. The parentage would probably be much more obvious if the colours were not altered by colour-feeding.—Mr. Curtis said he agreed.

Mr. Crisp: In speaking of bogey critics, does Mr. Prior think that a reporter should confine himself to saying nothing but sweet things of everybody's birds?—No, certainly not. What I take exception to is the flinging broadcast of insinuations, such as I have mentioned, concerning the trimming of Chaffinches' whites, the faking of Yellowbuntings' heads, and the staining of Linnets, etc. I doubt whether these practices really exist at all, and they certainly do not in the wholesale fashion these insinuations imply. But when such insinuations are published as the opinions of an "expert" reporter, there is an aspersion thrown on every exhibitor in these classes. Let us have fair and honest criticism, by all means—but do let it be really expert.

Mr. Prance: If you take dark feathers from a Yellowbunting, will the new feathers come lighter?—I doubt very much whether any alteration of colour would take place, but it is certain that excessive plucking would lead to a weaker growth of feather.

Mr. Crisp: Is it usual to stain Linnets?—I should say not, although I have heard of Linnets being disqualified for staining. I do know that it is not necessary to stain them, though I have in my mind at this moment the cases of specimens which are so exceptional in natural colour that they would doubtless be candidates for testing under certain judges.

Mr. Adamthwaite: To what extent will wild seeds improve colour in birds?—It would not be wise to expect much improvement in birds which are, as some are—almost without colour naturally. There is no doubt, however, that the use of wild seeds will improve whatever colour the birds naturally possess; the final result being, of course, governed by the amount of colour latent in the individual bird.

Mr. Kelly: Would the treatment and seeds for Linnets be the same as for Goldfinches? The treatment would be similar, but the seeds would be different. The stock mixture for a Linnet would be an equal bulk of Canary, teazel, linseed, and English and German rape. The green foods would be chickweed, groundsel, Shepherd's Purse, and plantain. Then there were, he said, the advertised wild-seed mixtures, which were very suitable for Linnets.—Having replied to a question by Mr. Wheller about the colouring of show cages, Mr. Prior resumed his seat.

The Chairman (Mr. A. C. Burn) said that he was sure they had all spent an enjoyable evening, and those present who were interested in British birds had benefited by this meeting. The subject of our native birds was one that should interest children—one which might be taught in our great schools. Children would then appreciate bird life, and would hesitate to rob nests, or throw stones to kill these most beautiful of God's creatures.—Mr. Burn then moved that our appreciation of Mr. Prior's services be placed on record. This was seconded by Mr. F. Curry, warmly supported by Mr. R. L. Crisp, and carried by acclamation. Mr. Prior, in reply, said that they had given him their attention, which he was pleased to observe was manifested by their intelligent questions, and he begged them to accept his sincere thanks.

Nests of birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

MY EXPERIENCES WITH BUDGERIGARS.

By G. R. BUSBY.

Where the Birds are Kept.

I have at the present moment three outdoor aviaries, containing English and foreign birds, and some fowls. I will now give you my first year's experience in the breeding of Budgerigars. The aviary is out of doors, and consists of an old Birmingham and Bristol Road tramcar, 17ft. long, 6ft. wide, and 6½ft. high. It is all boarded up, with the exception of the front, which is wired half way down from the top, and is boarded on the bottom half, with a door at both ends. It makes an extremely good and warm house, and I use no artificial heat whatever.

The Arrival of the Birds.

I saw advertised in CAGE BIRDS one dozen Budgerigars for, I think, 40s., or "nearest offer," and I think I wrote and offered him 30s. for the lot. What was my surprise to find that before I had had time to remit him the money, the birds arrived! The following morning I received a letter from him stating that he accepted my offer, and had sent the birds off.

When they arrived one was dead, but all the rest seemed quite healthy. But on turning them out into the aviary I found that one was unable to fly. It got alright, however, after a week or so. I then bought one dozen cocoanut husks from a Wolverhampton man, who also advertised in CAGE BIRDS, for 5s., and I hung them about. The birds were soon very busy going in and out of them. I might say that I wrote to the man whom I purchased the birds from, and he informed me that my birds, which were all green ones, were five old birds, and the other six their own young ones. So in order to get some strange blood, I exchanged some of the cocks with a neighbour who is a fancier also, and in about three weeks' time I had the satisfaction of finding about three husks with eggs in them.

As they all seemed to be going along nicely, and my aviary was a large one, I wrote to a well-known bird man for two pairs of Yellows, for which I paid 15s. Those birds arrived safely, and I was quite satisfied with them. They were two true pairs, but evidently not properly paired, for they caused quite a sensation amongst my green birds.

Two days after their introduction two lots of eggs had been thrown out of the nests. One Yellow bird was maimed, but got alright again, and one Green hen I found dead, although things had been going on so very pleasantly before they came. However, from that time things went on very well for a while.

Some Breeding Results.

After observing them for about a fortnight I found one pair of Yellows with eggs, and the other two Yellows both paired up to two Greens, but I took no notice—I let them go on as they liked. To my astonishment the first young I had were five beautiful Yellows, from a Green cock and a Yellow hen. But I think this hen was deserted by her Yellow husband, and then paired to the Green cock, as she has had about four nests since, and all the young have been Greens.

In the meantime the other birds were going along very well, as I had during the year about six nests with four birds in each, three nests of three, two nests of one only, and one nest of six Greens, and yet another nest of five Yellows; these last were from the Yellow pair. The Yellows bred continually up to December, when I took their nests away. They don't seem to know when to stop!

The last two or three nests of young, I found, looked alright until it was time for them to fly, and when they left the nest I found them on the floor unable to get on to the perches. I have very little time to attend to them, and their late nests of young have most of them died. Another thing I found was that they are so prolific that in some instances the old birds laid again in the nests before their young had left. But still, they seemed to hatch out the eggs alright. One thing I found with the late hatched nests was that the young got their feet clogged. Each claw had a lump as large as a Budgie's egg, and it took me a long time to get it off them.

Some Future Plans.

I have sold all the young Greens at 4s. 6d. and 5s. per pair, and the Yellows at 7s. and 8s. per pair—some to friends, and some through advertising in CAGE BIRDS. I exchanged one pair for a Cockatiel (cock), and another pair for three Zebra Finches. This spring I am putting up more Yellows and less Greens for breeding, as I find the Yellow no harder to breed than the Greens, and they fetch more money. I shall also get a hen Cockatiel and try my luck in the spring with breeding Cockatiels. With regard to the feeding of Budgerigars, I consider no birds more hardy or more easy to keep. I give them their seed from fountains that supply more seed as they eat it. The feed consists of plain Canary seed and millet seed in separate fountains. I also give them bread soaked in hot water. I find they like seeding grass. They drink very little water; in fact, I never see them do so, although I always keep a fountain of water in case they should require a drink. I have a few other birds flying loose with them, but I find that the Budgies are dangerous companions, and occasionally I find a maimed bird among them. So I would caution fanciers not to put any little favourite of another species with them. Such birds as Chaffinches, Greenfinches, Bramblefinches, Yellow Buntings, and the like, never seem to me to come to any harm, but Linnets, Goldfinches, Siskins, and other small birds, are sure to come to grief sooner or later.

The Colour-feeding of Birds.

By J. W. RAMSDEN.

What is the Natural Colour?

"Natural Colour Classes!"—I wonder how many of the gentlemen who vote for these classes could tell me what the natural colour of any bird really is? Mr. Blakston, writing in "Cassell's Book on Canaries" some thirty years ago referred to this subject in the following terms:—"What is the natural colour of the Canary? Is not the assumption of the fact that the colour in which it usually appears is its natural colour, rather an arbitrary assumption? If various descriptions of vegetable food, all of which it might find in a state of nature, and which it eats with avidity, affect its colour in as many degrees, who shall say that any one shade of colour is the colour, and that all other shades are unnatural? Is not the word unnatural wrongly applied? If anything be unnatural it is the artificial food, which the bird could not get in its natural state, for Canaries do not gather hard-boiled eggs, etc., amongst the fruits and seeds of the earth. Suppose a bird to have escaped into a conservatory, and to be observed eating some berries growing there, acrid and poisonous to ourselves, but of marked benefit to the bird, and by the action of certain properties in them beautifying its plumage; what lunatic would call such food unnatural, and such results unnatural? Again, I would ask: How could any judge tell if a bird in a natural colour class had been favoured with a marigold or nasturtium daily through its moult? Would such feeding bar an exhibitor in a non-fed class or not? In my humble opinion, it is the best for shows to leave the colour open."

Some short time ago a noted breeder, writing in CAGE BIRDS on the Border Fancy Canary (one of the varieties not usually colour-fed—in fact colour-feeding is prohibited by the Border Fancy Canary Club), gave the following instructions for feeding:—"Never forget to be up early with their breakfast, which should consist of half a teaspoonful of egg food, with four drops of Parrish's Chemical Food added one day, the next substituting a pinch of cayenne pepper in the egg food. Also put in the water a piece of sulphate of iron the size of a split pea, which should be changed every day where circumstances and time will allow."

This, I contend, is colour-feeding pure and simple, as I believe a correspondent pointed out at the time of the appearance of the article, and it tends to prove what a farce the "non fed" classes are.

Birds to Colour-Feed.

First, Canaries: With the exception of those known as "Liverpool Greens," all varieties of Canaries are improved in colour and appearance by being colour-fed on tasteless pepper. Norwich, Yorkshires, Lizards, and Cinnamons are the varieties in which colour counts most, and these varieties are, therefore, colour fed to produce the deepest colour possible. Crests, Crest-breds, Belgians, Scotch Fancies, and Border Fancies are not colour-fed to such an extent as the others I have named, but the more experienced exhibitors usually colour-feed these varieties in a way that will improve the colour, without indicating that the birds have been colour-fed.

Secondly, Mules and Hybrids: All Mules and Hybrids should be colour-fed, and in most cases they will show a better colour if from ½ to 1oz. of hot cayenne is mixed with 1lb. of the tasteless pepper.

Thirdly, British birds: Far and away the greater number of British birds are colour-fed, and are improved in colour and appearance by the process. Far greater skill is required in colour-feeding British birds than in colour-feeding Canaries. The feeder must think the matter over, and decide what shade of colour he wants in each bird, and then mix his colour-feed accordingly. Goldfinches, for instance, are much improved by using a colour-feed one-quarter the usual strength. This improves the colour of the yellow, and imparts a sheen to the bird's feathers; but if the colour-feed used is too strong in colour it will spoil the whites and the blaze. The Goldfinch is the most difficult bird to colour-feed; most of the other species of British birds are easily fed.

Lastly, foreign birds: These are not colour-fed to any great extent. Anyone wishing to colour-feed foreigners must study the matter carefully. Note the colours on the birds, and determine which of them would be improved by the mixing of a deep red with it, and also what colours would be spoilt by the use of a deep red. There is no hard and fast rule, but follow the instructions given in books on painting, re the mixing of colours, and you will not go far wrong.

Moulting for Colour.

As a rule a young Canary commences its first moult when about eight weeks old; the old birds will fall into moult about July, and from this time your bird rooms should be most carefully attended to. The moulting season is a critical time for the birds, especially the highly-bred exhibition stock. We all know that moulting is a provision of nature, but to birds kept in confinement it always seems to be a time of sickness. Get your birds into good condition, for strong healthy birds moult easily, whilst birds in poor condition usually have a bad moult.

Your cages should be clean, and all traces of red mite removed; the room, too, must be well ventilated, but free from draught. You will then be ready to commence the moulting season and colour-feeding. As a rule, it is safest to cage your best exhibition birds singly, but birds you know to be of a peaceful disposition can be placed three or four in a cage. If you have a large flight cage—not too high, and the perches all one height from the floor for preference—you may turn a dozen or even twenty birds in, for birds, like sheep, follow one another, and as soon as one starts feeding on the colour-food they will all "follow suit." It often happens that the best fed birds are those that have been fed in a flight.

Light has a great influence on colour, and it is important that the birds be protected from a strong light during the moulting season. I know many fanciers cover their birds up during the moult, but this is hardly necessary. I have found that a red or yellow blind kept drawn over the window will subdue the light quite enough to prevent its affecting the colour of the birds; it will also prevent the birds from seeing the colour of their new feathers so well, with the result that they will not fight or pluck each other so much. It is also a matter of great importance that the moulting room be kept at an even temperature. I like an even temperature of about 65 degrees, and it assists the birds very much if this heat be a moist one.

The birds should be fed on plain Canary seed, and this need never be taken from them. The colour-food should consist of the ordinary egg-food, to which has been added some tasteless pepper. I always commence with the following mixture:—Two tea biscuits, one hard-boiled egg, two teaspoonfuls of sugar, and one teaspoonful of tasteless pepper. Day by day I gradually increase the amount of pepper until I reach the maximum of four heaped-up teaspoonfuls. Those who wish to use hot pepper can add 1oz. of Natal to each pound of tasteless, and use as directed. To insure equal distribution, I pass the whole through a biscuit mill one hour before I use it. I allow a teaspoonful of this food to each bird per day, and have always found this quantity sufficient.

A good many fanciers, I may point out, use too much pepper; they overdo it. You have no idea of the strength of the dye contained in tasteless pepper, or you would the more easily understand what a small quantity is required per day to colour a bird's plumage. The blood will only absorb a certain amount of colour—to give more is to court disaster.

MY WAY OF BREEDING NORWICH PLAINHEADS.

Paper read before the Altrincham C.B.S., by Mr. A. Royle, on March 23rd.

Having been asked by your secretary to give you a paper on the breeding of Plainheads, I will, with your kind attention, try to explain my way of breeding this variety. First of all, the Norwich Plainhead Canary must be a bird full of colour, type, and quality, and of fairly good size; carriage must also be well aimed for. Without these no proper standard can be gained.

Methods and Results of Pairing.

The birds that I always use in pairing up are as follows: a clear buff cock to a clear yellow hen, and a clear yellow cock to a clear buff hen. The cock must be of good size with head as round as can be got; and with plenty of colour; the hen must be of good quality and not overlarge. It must not be taken for granted that you get all the colour you need for an exhibition bird from the above. To get the colour well grafted into my stock, I procure as good a green hen as I can—what I call a bronze green; not a grass green, because I think that the grass greens show too smoky a colour in clears. The reason I use a yellow green hen is because I find the yellow cock has a tendency to be long-sided and stilty of legs. Having got the right kind of hen, I then pair her up to a clear buff cock. By pairing up in this way you are likely to get some variegated youngsters. Also, it is quite possible you may obtain some nice clears, showing good depth of colour.

Another way of getting colour is to double yellow. I use one clear and the other marked, and have had good results in this way. Great care must be used here. Let the feather be as short and silky as possible. Also the birds must be as short and stout as possible, with good round heads, as a narrow head is of no use for this purpose. Double yellowing has a tendency to lengthen both feather and bird. Again, you may breed not only yellows but buffs in this way, as I have done so myself. If you should be fortunate enough to secure a good buff hen in this way, you would do well to pair this up with a ticked yellow cock. The reason I use a ticked bird here is that it helps to deepen the colour of the offspring.

How to Get Size.

Now, having done all you can to get colour, we find that the birds are on the small side. How then, are we to get size into our stock?

Well, I find the best and shortest way is to double buff; in doing this I get the cock as big as I can, with feather as short and as neat as possible, a variegated bird for preference. And I get the hen a clear buff as typical as can be. I have bred good stock and show birds in this way. It is generally thought that the clear birds, either yellows or buffs, are the best for show purposes, but to my mind some of the marked or variegated birds make very good show specimens. What looks better than a neatly marked bird on the bench? Besides, it is a very useful article in the breeding room, as I have already tried to show.

The Type of Bird Wanted.

But in trying to breed the Norwich Plainhead I should like to impress on you that it is difficult to get the birds that are required for winning, as in a great many cases type is completely ignored, and unless all the judges can see their way to keep to the standard set down for us to breed to, we shall have to go back to the Crestbred for help, because some of the birds that I have seen win appear more like Crestbreds than otherwise.

I do not want to pose as an authority on this breed, but during the twelve years I have been breeding and showing, the changes have been numerous. While the long-sided and beetle-browed birds are preferred by some of our judges, others show daylight underneath enough to do credit to a Yorkshire. The correct type, therefore, gets left out in the cold.

How, then, is the novice to be expected to follow up the Fancy? We all know that the true Norwich type is easier to get in medium sized birds than in the large ones, as we are told that the length should not be more than six and a half inches from the tip of the beak to the end of the tail. A bird of this length and stout in proportion, deep in colour, silky in plumage, and short in flights and tail, takes a lot of getting, and when obtained and shown clean and in sound condition takes a lot of beating.

I must now bring my paper to a close, and if it has been of any service, especially to the novice, I shall be more than satisfied. I shall also be only too pleased to try to answer any questions you wish to ask. The four pairs of birds brought for examples to breed from, received very great attention and admiration from all present, especially the variegated buff cock, which it is intended to use this year for double buffing. A good number of questions were asked and were very ably answered by Mr. Royle, after which a vote of thanks was accorded to the lecturer for the excellent way in which he had delivered his address.

Management of Scotch Fancy and Belgian Canaries.

By THOMAS SMITH.

The males should break forth into singing by the middle of December at the latest. Many a hitherto supposed hen is discovered to be of the opposite sex, to the chagrin of the owner, causing him to look out for another mate, which is frequently unfortunate, as the cream for breeding purposes have been disposed of.

However, with a diligent search, it is possible to get a serviceable mate even at the eleventh hour. A fancier may suddenly give up the Fancy, which presents a favourable opportunity. Fanciers with a reliable strain, however, do not readily abandon the Fancy.

Spare Hens and Foster Parents.

Spare hens should be kept. Egg binding and other ills remove one's hens at that period of the year when they are most wanted, and cannot be purchased for either love or money. A hen not much to look at but well bred comes in handy as a "spare," and may produce superior stock to that of her prize winning sister.

A well bred bird (not much of a one in appearance) should be valued. And no one can pair such birds to the same advantage as the breeder. He knows the weak and the strong traits, and can match his birds accordingly.

Prize winners come from unexpected quarters, and sometimes from an odd bird that no purchaser would take.

Too many fanciers leave the getting of foster parents till a more convenient season. This in my opinion is a gross mistake. In the months of September, October and November a choice can be had, but in December, January and February they are not so easily picked up, and those who wait till these months, have to take what they can get, and many fanciers get "landed" with bad feeders, which, as every fancier knows, is a calamity. Everything depends upon the careful hatching and rearing of the birds we so much want to save. Readers have, no doubt, seen fanciers in sore straits in the months of April, May, June or July to procure reliable foster parents to save and bring up newly-hatched birds.

Foster parents of a reputed rearing strain are about as important as a reputed winning strain itself; they are both of considerable importance, and a great deal depends upon each. I advise the getting in of foster parents before the end of the year, so as to get them accustomed to their environment. Change of residence later may result in a false moult, which is a serious drawback to the workers.

Concerning Show Cages.

The Scotch Fancy Canary is exhibited in a lightly-got-up cage, with two perches, and black wires, and is painted inside according to the taste of the exhibitor. The cage is of various sizes, but it should be of such dimensions as will enable the bird to travel freely when put through its facings at the judging.

The Belgian is exhibited in a small cage made for the purpose, and painted black both outside and inside, and the wires also. The cage is usually covered with green cloth to protect the exhibit from draught. The Belgian is not so lively as the Scotch Fancy, and requires to be well taken care of. Some of the finest exhibition cages are made by amateurs. They put superior material and workmanship into them. A beautiful and well-finished cage enriches the appearance of the exhibit, therefore a nice cage is not to be despised. Judges who are officiating often know who the exhibitor is by the pattern of cage—which has been a bone of contention. It has been urged, and not without good reason, that the cages should be all of one pattern and type throughout; but after all, it is questionable if that would be of benefit. The individual bird comes to be well known, and particularly if it is a first-class specimen, as its identity cannot be concealed.

All honour to the judges; they are men who do their duty without fear or favour. The judging is done openly, the exhibitors and visitors being spectators from the gallery, or from a space set apart for them during the judging.

At the Judging Time.

The Scotch Fancy Canary is usually judged by two. Two cages are held up against each other, the object being to draw out the latent excellencies and to arrive at a correct judgment as to the best. The exhibits throughout are compared in this way until the requisite number of birds have been set apart for the prize cards, and these are placed on the table, and compared over and over again until they are placed in the right order of merit. The unsuccessful exhibitors are seldom satisfied with the awards, the disposition to see excellencies in their own stock which do not exist, dominating their idea as to what ought to win. Judges are not infallible, and they do make slips sometimes, but, taken on the whole, their work is a credit to them and to the Fancy. They love the work for the work's sake. But if a judge should lapse into easy-going judgment, and is followed by a competent reporter, the matter would be caught-up. Members are sufficiently alert to appoint reliable judges, knowing that the success of the show largely depends upon their work.

The Belgian Canary is judged by one gentleman. Its qualities are drawn out when it remains sitting on one perch. Its head cannot be got too far down, or the shoulders be too prominent. The chest in a good bird is clean cut, and the body, wings, and tail, are straight. The Belgian has decreased in size, supposed to have been brought about by inter-breeding with inferior Scotch Fancy Canaries.

The pure large Belgian Canary is a valuable bird, and ever will be in demand for crossing with Scotch Fancies, dependence being placed upon the Belgian for the high shoulders, drive, and clean cut chest. The breeding of pure Belgians of good size cannot be too strongly recommended. Young birds from such stock of the right stamp always command handsome prices.

Fanciers differ as to the wisdom of allowing birds to have the use of the bath on the day following the show. The weather in this respect should be considered before anything. Should it be mild and bright a plunge will assist to remove the feeling of tiredness which invariably comes over a bird after the severe handling it receives at a show. The water should be tepid, and the bird should be out of all draught whilst bathing, and immediately thereafter. Birds are subject to all the ills that flesh is heir to, and every means should be taken to avert chills, as it is from these that many troubles spring. "Prevention is better than cure."

Show Only Healthy Birds.

A bird that exhibits signs of being out of order should not be sent to a show, as it will come back infinitely worse, with the trouble accentuated. Besides, nothing is to be gained, the sickly subject having not the slightest chance against a healthy exhibit. It should be kept at home, and every effort directed towards getting it into a normal condition of health. The loss of a few prizes is nothing compared with the death of a promising bird, whose life might have been saved by the exercise of a little patience.

A bird should only be exhibited when in full bloom. Colour has little bearing in the case of a Scotch Fancy or Belgian Canary, but bloom on the plumage is not without its effect. Beautiful feathers, remember, make beautiful birds.

THE MATING OR BALANCING UP OF BIRDS FOR BREEDING.

Lecture delivered before the West Bromwich and District C.B.S. by Mr. Weaver, on March 16th.

At the conclusion of the table show held at the headquarters of the West Bromwich and Dist. C.B.S. on March 16th, Mr. Weaver, of Wolverhampton, who judged, kindly offered to give us a little lecture, taking as his subject "Mating or Balancing Up."

Mr. Weaver said he thought this would be a very fitting matter for birdy men to discuss just at this time of the year, as he had no doubt most of them had been exercising their minds on the desirability of mating certain pairs together for breeding certain essentials or points. To do this, he said, we require to know what are the propensities and the pedigree of the parents we intend to breed from, and this point I want the novices to take especial notice of. Do not be guided altogether by the particular fancier whom you intend to purchase from by his telling you that this or that particular pair will do you good, without you see some of the stock which he himself has been breeding. Doubtless, it will be hard to get into some of the fanciers' rooms, as you have to have the stock they send you or none at all. This plan I should strongly condemn, as I consider nine out of every ten are not breeders, but dealers.

To go on with my lecture: Although I say this is a very fitting time to thoroughly make up our minds on the matter, the wise fancier has come to the conclusion long before now—even so far back as the beginning of the late show season, and some even before that—just what birds he will want for the coming breeding-season's work.

Half the Battle.

Mr. Weaver at this point gave the novice some more good advice—to well weigh up his stock before parting with any birds that would be likely to be valuable in the building up of his strain, knowing the particular propensities of the individuals of his stock. The knowledge of these particular propensities, or the strain from which the birds have come, is half the battle. You may have many arguments with yourself as to why you should mate up a certain cock to a certain hen. Mr. Weaver here quoted some of the propensities in certain varieties that are very difficult to combat. Take the Norwich, for instance, he said—clumsy wing carriage, too much length in tail, too much heavy feather around the vent, which should be cut away well; and another very difficult one the flat skull, which gives the bird a very bad browy appearance, which some carry bad enough without the flatness. Pretty well the same remarks, said the lecturer, apply to most of the standard varieties. Two bad faults in the Yorkshires are hollowed necks and open chests.

The generally accepted ideas of mating, continued the lecturer, are evenly-balanced pairs both for size and general fitness. The largest stock cock, mated to the small or medium hen, comes next; but very rarely do we see anyone advocate the over-large hen to the cock on the small size. Now, my experience is—and I have the greatest faith in it—that the pairs should be the nearest to the standard of the particular varieties that one intends to go in for. My experience has been that a better and more evenly-balanced result is obtained by this method than by using up the big cocks to the small but typical hens.

The Evenly-balanced Method.

Mr. Weaver gave some very interesting results in his own experience, and said he had better results and also bred more winners by the evenly-balanced or the standard-size method than by any other, and he has tried very nearly every way that is possible I will explain to you, continued the lecturer, why I should not pair birds according to some of the accepted principles of mating a bird weak in certain points to another perhaps rather overdone in this respect, and I advise my friends to be very careful in this matter, as it is very misleading to those with little experience. Here, above all others, the propensities of the blood may have a great deal to do in the matter, and I could give you some excellent object lessons on the good and bad points' system in the several varieties I have kept. Let me here say how very difficult it is to breed out the bad points thus introduced, because some of the general faults of the one bird and then the faults of the other must certainly be reproduced in the resulting youngsters and so on, even to the stock that has the preponderance of the opposite good quality.

Mr. Weaver closed his lecture by explaining what would be a well-mated pair of the several varieties he had successfully bred for the last twelve years. Here several questions were asked, and Mr. Weaver answered them without any hesitation whatever. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. Weaver, to which he responded, brought a most interesting meeting to a close.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

Spring Ways of the Peewits.

Now the snow has gone it is pleasant to get out into the fields and note the changes already apparent through the coming of a more genial temperature. On every side the buds are swelling; distant woodland shows a warmth of colour very different to the sombre hues of winter. Here and there on the edge of the copse, and along the hedgerows, the hardy elder trees are showing leaf, the vivid green attracting the eye. And how delightful it is to see this early evidence of future beauty! Spring flowers are pushing up their tiny spikelets, and on the sheltered banks the violets compete with the pale primroses of the woodlands to give local colour to the surroundings. Thrushes and Blackbirds sing from dawn till sundown, and the music of the Larks is most incessant; and so plentiful are these grand songsters that from every yard of the countryside, highway, and footpath, silvery music strikes the ear.

Away on the uplands the broad winged Peewits toy with each other in amatory play, sometimes in pairs, sometimes singly, and sometimes a dozen or so in a bunch. They go through the most extraordinary evolutions. When a Peewit is on wing there is no more fascinating bird to watch. It seems to me impossible to pass a flock without staying for a time to wonder at their wing power and gracefulness of movement. From now until the young are fledged and on the wing, the flight is so devoid of directness, twisting, and turning so quickly, that it appears to show a restless, agitated state, very different to the long full sweeping curves of the winter months. In a few days these small gatherings will be dispersed. Each male bird manages to entice a partner away to some quiet spot, and although many pairs may be nesting on the same hill-side there is always a certain space between them.

Rare Thrush Shot.

At a recent meeting of the British Ornithological Club Mr. T. Parker exhibited a specimen of the Black-throated Thrush (Turdus atrigularis). It was shot at Newenden, Kent, on January 29th last, and is only the third recorded appearance of the species in Britain.

The Woodcocks' Ways.

Among the early breeders must be counted the Woodcocks. They generally nest in March or early in April, depositing from three to five eggs. When the young are hatched the old birds carry them nightly to the feeding ground. These birds are very conservative, and visit the same woods season after season.

Pick-a-Bud.

Fruit growers just now are carefully watching the trees to catch a glimpse of one of our most beautiful birds. Not that the generality of gardeners have any special liking for the brightly coloured Bullfinch, but at this season of the year when the trees are thick with buds, he is looked upon as a beautiful enemy, and either frightened away or killed at sight. It is his nature to pick the bud, but whether for good or ill is still a point for argument.

A Plea for the Wild Birds.

Think what a district would be without its wild song birds. How could we spare the carolling of the Skylark, the cheery notes of the Robin, and Song Thrush, and the rich mellow music of the Blackbird at sundown? They may take toll of the fruit and grain, but we can surely spare some in return for the pleasure they give us. By keeping down the insect pest they aid the farmer and the gardener to such an extent that without them a crop of any kind would be impossible.

PRESTON O.S..

Meeting held April 1st, there being a large attendance. It was decided to hold the annual First Feather Show on July 10th. The Secretary was instructed to write Mr. Hirst with regard to the judging of same. We also decided to have Mr. R. Anderton's lantern display at our next meeting, May 6th. Several new members were elected.—R. TAYLOR, Sec.

LANCASHIRE C.A.

Only a few members turned up at Middleton for our meeting and the lecture on Lancashires, so we decided to leave the lecture over to some future date, when it is to be hoped more of our members will turn up. Mr. J. Oldham was elected chairman. It was decided that the last day for receiving our club patronage be July 31st. We fixed our next meeting to be held at Littleborough on the date of the First Feather Show of the Littleborough C.B.S. A hearty vote of thanks to our Chairman brought the meeting to a close.—WM. ADAMS, Hon. Sec.

Y.C.C. OF SCOTLAND.

Meeting held on March 30th, in Mr. Muir's rooms, Saltmarket, Glasgow. The First Feather Show was fixed to be held June 30th, when a special general meeting will also be held to grant patronage for coming season. A gold medal is promised by Dr. C. Syson, and a silver medal by Mr. W. B. Cobb for competition at this show. It was decided to open a special prize list, to provide a silver medal at each show held under club patronage, no member to be eligible to win more than one such medal during the season. Will members wishing to contribute towards same kindly send on at their earliest, along with subscriptions, which are now due? A very instructive and interesting lecture was given by Mr. R. B. Gibb, which was thoroughly appreciated. Two new members were made, namely, Mr. W. Loan (Glasgow), and Mr. J. Johnson (Govan), bringing our total up to 13 new members for this season. The meeting closed with the usual vote of thanks to the lecturer.—FRED BOWMAN, Hon. Sec.

HALIFAX O.S.

On April 3rd, at the Griffin Hotel, Mr. T. W. Wilson (Halifax) gave a lecture on "Breeding Season Troubles," which was very highly appreciated by the members and friends present, the large room being packed to its utmost capacity. The lecturer dealt with the subject in a very able manner, and no doubt gave several very useful and instructive hints to the champions as well as to the novices. Several questions were asked and were answered satisfactorily. A hearty vote of thanks was proposed to the lecturer by Mr. H. H. Sutcliffe, which was seconded by Mr. Lee and carried with acclamation. Mr. Wilson suitably replied, which brought a very pleasant evening to a close. We had the pleasure of making seven new members, which brings the total of new members for this year up to 14. The next meeting will be held on May 1st, when Mr. H. W. Walsh will give a lecture, the subject to be announced later. Fanciers will be welcome.—H. WHITAKER, Assist. Sec.

CITY AND SUBURBAN A.C.B.

Meeting at headquarters, on March 8th, with Mr. R. L. Crisp in the chair. Letters were read from the Rev. Dr. Morrison graciously accepting the vice-presidentship, and from the Secretary of the London Federation. Messrs. C. Hawes, J. Groves, R. Knight, and A. Baker were elected members. Arising out of the letter from the Secretary of the Federation, it was proposed, seconded, and carried that a subscription of one penny per member, and a donation of one penny per member towards the initial expenses of the London Federation, be paid from the funds. The notice of motion, viz., "That a person winning in a champion class shall remain in that section," was confirmed, also that the delegates be instructed to consider an insurance scheme of birds, and their decision referred back to the Association. The motion standing in the name of Mr. Honeysett was left over for future consideration. Here, Mr. F. Wyse made an observation that he considered the delegates should be empowered to bring forward the question of paying carriage for birds whilst personally accompanied. He had been made on several occasions to pay, but the last time he was requested to, he settled it by the use of natural weapons. (This elicited roars of laughter from the members.) A letter of condolence was instructed to be conveyed to Mr. A. C. Burn and Mr. A. W. Curtis upon their indisposition. The Secretary announced that a lecture upon "Foreign Birds" would be given by Wesley Page, Esq., on April 26th. A judging competition on "cage bird staging" took place, with Mr. Silver as final judge, four amateurs and 14 novices taking part, with 10 exhibits. At the close, Mr. Silver made observations upon the exhibits before him and answered many questions in a satisfactory manner. The prize for the best staged bird was awarded to Mr. F. Curry, with a Yellow Bunting, and the second to Mr. W. Page, with a Greenfinch. With a few encouraging words, Mr. Crisp presented the handsome struck silver medal to Mr. Curry, and the bronze to Mr. Page. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Silver for his splendid services. A vote of thanks to the Chairman closed the meeting.—V. WYNN, Hon. Sec.

WELSH C.B.C.

Annual general meeting held at the Ship and Bell, Merthyr, on April 3rd. There was a fair attendance of members, also Mr. Love, of Bristol, the noted British bird exhibitor. In the absence of the Chairman Mr. T. H. Melhuish took the chair. Letters were read regretting their inability to attend from Messrs. T. L. Castree (Chairman), H. W. Sheldon, E. P. Roberts, W. Winnard, Messrs. Lewis and Dymond, and Mr. J. Prichard. The Secretary presented the balance-sheet, which showed a balance to the good of £6 4s. 1d. The amount in hand from the 1907 accounts was 19s. 10d. The report was accepted as read. Several rules were revised and brought up-to-date. All moneys will from this date be placed in Lloyd's Bank, and cheques will be signed by the Secretary and Treasurer. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded Mr. G. T. Jones and the Show Committee, the show being held at Brecon last November. It was decided to hold the next show at Merthyr. Mr. A. E. Brown was elected club show secretary, and Mr. J. H. Jones, show manager. Mr. T. H. Melhuish was elected to judge. Applications for the club's patronage must be made on or before July 19th. It was decided to exchange medals with the Toronto C.B.S. again this year, making the third year that this friendly exchange has been agreed upon. Mr. Sandiford's Cup was also accepted for the third year. It is expected that there will be very keen competition for this cup next season. A vote of thanks was accorded Mr. Sandiford. The following gentlemen were elected as members: Messrs. J. Dallemore (Cardiff), Lewis Lewis (Merthyr), W. Oates (Penrhweeeiber), G. Chail (Mountain Ash). The next business was the nomination of officers for the year. The Chairman (Mr. T. L. Castree) wished to be released from that office for the present. The Secretary also wished to withdraw from office on account of business pressure, but upon the proposition of Mr. Melhuish, who spoke in very glowing terms of the work that the Secretary had done during the four years that he had held office, it was thought that the club could not do better than appoint the Secretary (Mr. D. H. Tedstone) as their Chairman. This was carried unanimously. Mr. Melhuish was elected Vice-Chairman, and Mr. J. H. Jones as Treasurer. There being no other nomination, these stand elected. Messrs. G. T. Jones (Brecon) and D. G. Lewis (Cardiff) were nominated for the office of Secretary. Ballot papers will be sent out shortly for each member to vote for a Secretary, Committeemen, Auditors, and Judges. The cups and medals were presented to those winners of them who were present. The winners are as follows: Leech Challenge Cup, Canary section, Mr. G. L. Harber; British section, Lewis and Dymond; D. Jones' Cup, George Gregory; Sandiford's, G. T. Jones; medals, Toronto C.B.S., J. H. Jones; club medals, T. L. Castree, J. T. Jones, W. Card, G. Gregory, Lewis and Dymond, J. H. Jones, A. E. Brown, H. W. Sheldon, G. L. Harber, and Mrs. C. Jonkins; Mr. J. Pritchard took the gold medal for best team at the club show. Mr. T. H. Melhuish then gave a very interesting address upon the breeding and management of Canaries, which was listened to with great interest.

GOOLE AND DISTRICT F.S.

Meeting held April 1st. It was decided to hold a members' show on June 12th, and an open show on Nov. 25th. The late Secretary sent in his resignation, which was accepted. Next meeting will be held at Verymuden Hotel, at 8 p.m. Will all members please attend. Anyone within a radius of twelve miles wishing to join should apply to me at 13, Manual-street, Goole.—A. ROBERTS, Hon. Sec.

SANDY LANE & DISTRICT C.B.S.

Supper and concert, held on March 23rd; 55 sat down. After supper we had a splendid concert, Mr. David Sowden being in the chair. After congratulating Messrs. Bailey and Swanger on winning the cup, and also other members on winning their prizes, a splendid programme was gone through, Messrs. Batty, Bentley, Wellock, Whatmuff, and Sunderland being the vocalists and Mr. E. Varley the elocutionist. It was a most enjoyable evening, the time passing all too rapidly.—B. BUCKLE, secretary.

BIRD FOOD SPECIALISTS.

26, LUDGATE HILL,

LONDON, E.C.

April 1st, 1909

Dear Sir,

Fanciers have had many foods placed before them as substitutes for the home-made egg food, such as yellow biscuit meal, and foods containing an infinitesimal percentage of egg (possibly none at all) or yolk of egg, a bad smelling, insoluble, indigestible substance, more often than not manufactured from bad eggs, and naturally they have been discarded with disgust by practical and thinking Fanciers, and the old method reverted to.

What has been wanted is a food with a guaranteed percentage of fresh eggs, showing the same nutriment as when in the raw state, also the absence of colouring matter as a guarantee of purity. We give all these guarantees, and have satisfied the leading Fanciers that what has been badly wanted is now procurable.

We guarantee our "EGG & BISCUIT" to contain 50% of actual egg, and advise you to send for a sample 6d., or 1/- tin at once; postage paid, 7½d. and 1/3.

Yours faithfully,

FOX BROS. & CO.

KIRKSTALL AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held March 27th, at headquarters, Congregational Schoolrooms, Mr. Chew in the chair. There was a nice attendance to hear Mr. Yelland's remarks on "Breeding and Rearing." Previous to the commencement of his lecture, the usual business was settled, also the election of judge for Young Bird Show. Mr. King (Leeds) was appointed. Two new members joined us, viz., Messrs. Smith and Flint, and we trust they will benefit by doing so. Mr. Yelland's lecture was not lengthy, but very interesting, and to the point. He gave particulars and details of his method, which had proved very satisfactory, but if fanciers found they were obtaining good results from their own, his advice was "stick to it." Many questions were asked and were satisfactorily answered. General remarks were made by others present, both humorous and instructive. The meeting terminated with a vote of thanks to Mr. Yelland.—WHITELEY AND HORNBY, Hon. Secs.

COVENTRY O.S.

Lecture on Breeding Cages & Appliances

On March 17th, Mr. Geo. Turrell gave a lecture on "Breeding Cages and Appliances." His remarks, he said, would be addressed to the younger fanciers more than to older ones than himself, and quoted the advice of a former president of the society, the late Dr. Bradburn, "that utility should never be sacrificed to fancy, or ornamental cages." He said he made all his own cages, including his show cages, and up to quite recently the whole of the cage had to be made, no punched bar fronts being obtainable. The old-fashioned way was to put up shelving with simple fronts put in, but the present and up-to-date breeding cage was a box cage, complete in itself, so that it could be removed for cleaning purposes, etc. As to the size of breeding cages, there was necessarily no fixed size, but a reasonable size was one 3 feet long, equally divided by a sliding partition, 11 in. by 16½ in. high—one convenient for all purposes, and yet not too small for even Crests. Racks were preferable to shelving. If the space at your disposal, he said, is limited, you may adopt a smaller size, 2 ft. 6 in. by 14 in. high, and 10 in. back to front, large enough for Norwich, and also large enough when divided for two separate birds. He contended that all cages should be glued, to avoid harbours for redmite; also that to thoroughly clean out cages the birds should be removed. He always did so, he said, as he thought it was impossible to clean them satisfactorily without doing so, and thought it did the birds no harm, but tamed them and made them steady for show purposes. The nest boxes he used were made of wood, with perforated zinc bottoms, and were wider at the top than at the bottom. The shape allowed the droppings to leave the sides of the nest box. Respecting perches, he preferred a rough square perch with the corners taken off. He trained his birds in a similar but a deeper show cage than the one in general use, as the usual size was too small for the birds to be kept in excellently made and finished, quite as good as what one could buy. Many offers by members of orders for similar ones were made, but were not at any time. The various cages, etc., shown were accepted. After many questions had been asked and answered, a vote of thanks was proposed by Mr. T. E. Waring and seconded by Mr. T. Gilbert. Mr. P. W. Harris occupied the chair.—GEO. PETERS, Hon. Sec.

*Out for the Breeding Season Only.

This story was told me by my father, and the incident happened about 20 years ago. A friend of my father once had a cock Lark which used to go about the room and perch on his shoulder. But one morning he flew out of the open window and was lost for ever, as the owner thought. Imagine his surprise, however, when, after staying out all the breeding season, he found him perched on the top of his cage.—Sent by Ed. G. Kont (age 14), 52, Darnell Street, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

*A Homing Goldfinch.

An uncle of mine had a Goldfinch from my father, and one day he took the cage and bird outside so as to clean it. The cage door unfortunately opened, and the Goldfinch flew away. It joined some Sparrows and went off with them. My uncle hunted after it, but could not see it. Then he thought on a plan. He hung the empty cage on a nail on the wall outside to see what that would do. Some of the onlookers thought it a very silly idea to hang out an empty cage. However, he left it there and went away to the pit. When he returned home two hours later, the Goldfinch was in the cage looking quite at home, and hopping from perch to perch with the cage door open.—Sent by Anu Muir (age 14), 147, Five Roads, Kilwinning, Ayrshire.

A Raven's Sagacity.

Many years ago a pet Raven living at an inn in Hungerford, was called Rafe. One day when the landlord was driving in his yard he ran over the leg of his Newfoundland dog and while he was examining the injury Rafe was evidently a concerned spectator; for the minute the dog was tied up under the manger with my horse, Rafe not only visited him but brought him bones, and attended on him with particular and repeated marks of kindness. The bird had been bought with the dog, and the affection between them was mutual, and all the neighbourhood had been witnesses of their many acts of kindness. Rafe's poor dog after a while got its leg broken again, and during the long time he was confined, Rafe waited on him constantly, carried him provisions, and scarcely ever left him alone. One night by accident the stable door had been shut, and Rafe was deprived of the company of his friend the whole night; but the ostler found in the morning that the door was so pecked away that had it not been opened in another hour, Rafe would have made his own entrance.—Sent by Frank Gardner (age 10), 16, Devonshire Road, Blackpool.

THE GREATEST VALUE FOR MONEY EVER OFFERED. GET YOUR COPY AT ONCE

I beg to thank you for the framed plate of Goldfinch and Bullfinch, which I received quite safely, being the special kindly given by you at our annual show. Also for the bound volume of CAGE BIRDS won at Hinckley, and sent through their secretary. I find the volume very interesting reading, being of a year before I took such interest in your publication, and in the hobby of breeding first-class exhibition birds. I am looking forward to doing great things this year.—H. CHRISTIAN (Leicester).

I have sold my winning self yellow green cock Canary, second at the Crystal Palace, etc., to Mr. G. Francis, of Lowestoft, writes Mr. V. H. Deacon (Liverpool). I have also sold my unflighted foul yellow cock Canary, 1st and special at the Crystal Palace, to a well-known Midland fancier. I might say that both these gentlemen were very well pleased with their purchases. My advertisement in CAGE BIRDS during the past season has been very successful, and I must tender you my best thanks; with all good wishes for the future.

The Wibsey and Dis. C.B.S. have issued a list of members' shows to be held during the 1909 season at the Horse and Groom Inn, Wibsey. There will be four Second Feather and two First Feather Shows, for the former of which Messrs. J. Dawson, R. Halliday, W. Cruise, and H. Sutcliffe are the appointed judges, Messrs. J. Bailey, and J. Townend being the judges for the latter. At the show to be held on December 27th, four classes will be provided for novices who have never won a money prize in full classes during the season; good prizes are to be offered in this section.

A Domesticated Blue Tit.

During the early part of the month of November, 1908, writes a Blackburn correspondent to a weekly paper, I had an old tree stuck in the grass three yards from my sitting-room window, to which I hung six cocoanuts, for the Blue Tits. One little bird has come every night to sleep in one of the cocoanuts. A remarkable incident occurred a few weeks ago. The little Blue Tit was missing for two nights, and on examining the cocoanuts I found with the previous heavy rains they were full of water. The gardener emptied the nut, and the very same night the little bird returned. It is now nearly five months since the bird first came to roost in the cocoanut, and at the present moment it is asleep in its curious bed.

ILLUSTRATED IDEAS

Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some ideas useful to the bird-keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird room or aviary, with a rough sketch of same where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

CATS AND OUTDOOR AVIARIES.

To prevent cats from injuring or killing the birds in an outdoor aviary, I enclose you a sketch of an idea that I use for my own aviary. I have never had a bird injured in any way by cats. It is very simple, and costs about 4½d. Get a round broom-handle, and two iron ends such as window blind rollers are fixed in (get the two ends with holes in them—not one with a slot). Cut the broom handle to the length required, drive two stout, round, wire nails in each end, and fix it about two inches from the bottom of the wire front of the aviary, as shown in sketch.—H. PETTIT.

A DEVICE FOR CREST CAGES.

Sent by B. Blackburn, 9, Grafton Street, Clitheroe, Lancs.

I herewith enclose two sketches of a simple idea of value to Crest fanciers—a water and food hole, which does not spoil the Crests as the ordinary small round hole does. Certain wires are cut off short in the cage front, as shown on the first sketch, the same width and height as the seed-box. The head hole for the seed-box (the latter will have a cover on) can be made a wire wider than the water-hole. The wire "shade" is to go over the top of the water-tin, and is made from ordinary cage wire, which I find is easily twisted with a pair of small pliers into the loops, as shown in the second sketch. When fixed, it should be on the same level as the rim of the water glass, wires bent over half moon shape, and soldered from loop to loop, equal distance apart, so the bird cannot get out. This cover slides up the wires and permits one to get the water glass out quite easily. I use this idea in my bird-room, and I find it valuable for keeping the crests straight and tidy after getting them ready for show.—B. BLACKBURN.

CANARY QUERIES.

Perpetually Moulting.

G.C.W.—Examine cage and its immediate surroundings for the presence of red mites, and radicate them if found. Add a few quassia chips to bathing water two or three times a week. Discontinue seed mixture you name, and feed as frequently advised here: plain Canary as a staple, with rape separately three times a week, a few grains of hemp, and half a teaspoonful of egg-food or crushed sponge cake each twice a week. As green food, chickweed, or groundsel four times a week. In the drinking water give six drops dandelion juice, Epsom salts, and chlorate of potash, of each as much as will cover a sixpence, every other day for a week; afterwards, twenty drops of port wine, in each ounce of which a pennyworth of citrate of iron and quinine has been mixed every other day until moulting ceases.

Canary Pecking Itself.

L. R. Rydill.—It would have been helpful had you said how you feed the bird, as wrong feeding may be the cause of the irritation. Feed on a staple of plain Canary only, and give twice a week half a teaspoouful of summer rape separately; on two other days give a small piece of bread sopped in milk, with two drops of best salad oil on it, and a few grains of inga seed sprinkled over it. Every second day give a scrap of green food—either tender groundsel top, chickweed, or watercress, in the order named, if obtainable. A mealworm daily for a time might also help, but limit the diet solely to these items. When it pecks at itself badly, very slightly anoint the parts with castor oil. Allow it to bathe freely when the weather is mild. Keep cage and perches quite clean, and the cage strewn with clean, gritty sand. In the drinking water give twelve drops of dandelion juice, as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and the same quantity of chlorate of potash, two days in every three for a week, and in the second week give four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid every second day.

Enamel and Borders.

W.S.B., Bramhall.—(1) Yes, it would be quite safe to do the wires of your cages with such an enamel as you suggest, provided you took sufficient care to see that the enamel had dried quite hard all over before putting birds in them. It often happens that enamels remain soft in small patches and drops for a long time. This is due to spreading it on unevenly, and to the presence of grease or other matter on the wires. Before putting on the enamel, thoroughly clean the wires by washing in hot soda and water, and allow to get quite dry. (2) You would undoubtedly breed self greens, and broken greens, from the pair you name, but I would advise you to breed from a pair so closely related only on condition that neither they nor their parents were in-bred, and that both birds were thoroughly sound and healthy. Given these conditions no harm would probably result from this union, but do not repeat the experiment with any of the progeny next year.

Seeds and Pairing.

F.E.C.—I hope I have deciphered initials correctly. (1) If you have any number of birds to enter for, you would find it much the best plan not only to buy your seeds separately, but to give them to the birds in the same way. Mixing seeds together not only encourages a deal of waste, but also gives the birds the opportunity of picking out certain kinds, of which they get more than is good for them. In the seed hopper an unlimited supply of Canary seed only should be given regularly as a staple, and rape given separately in small quantities two or three times a week; hemp ditto, but in still smaller quantities, and not more than twice a week. All the rest on special occasions. Both for general usage and for particular purposes you will find details for feeding and giving such seeds as maw, inga, linseed, gold of pleasure, and several others, of all of which only comparatively minute quantities are required, frequently repeated in this column. (2) It is a pity you did not put the cock in to this hen earlier when you saw how things were going. Your proper plan now is to let her sit her full time on the single clear egg, and if you should happen to have a brood of young deserted, and no other foster parent handy, it would be as well to try them under this hen, putting them under at night and giving a little fresh egg-food. If she takes kindly to them, let her rear them. If you have no such young, then throw out the egg after its full time has expired, remove nest pan for a day or two, turn in the cock, and replace nest pan and clean nesting material, as soon as you see they have accepted each other "for better or worse."

Two More in One.

Punctured.—(1) I think it is not unlikely this bird has been used to a higher temperature than that you keep it in. You should keep it in the cosiest corner of your room quite out of the way of draughts and chills, but as bright as possible. Give it an extra small teaspoonful of rape each week, and in the egg-food, of which you may give half a teaspoonful every second day for a week, well mix two drops of port wine and one of cod liver oil emulsion, and sprinkle it with a few grains of gold of pleasure each time. In the drinking water give it a pinch of Epsom salts for one day, and after that add twenty drops of port wine, and two each of tincture of steel and tincture of gentian to its water for a few days. (2) Give this bird egg-food prepared the same as for the other three times a week, but do not increase the rape seed. Sprinkle the egg-food with equal parts of inga and gold of pleasure seed. Give six drops of dandelion, six of syrup of rhubarb, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence in the water for three days. After that give the last-named mixture for No. 1 every second day for a week. Give a small leaf of dandelion to these birds each day, and slowly increase it to double the quantity. In the case of No. 2, if not in both cases, I should suggest that you test their power of sight by putting your finger or some object quietly towards them.

Canary Querists should send to our publisher for "Canary Breeding for Beginners," 7d.; "House's Canary Manual," 1/2; and "Yorkshire Canaries," 1/-, post free.

Loose and Soft.

Cymro.—If you have been feeding hen on the diet named all through the winter, she is undoubtedly in an overfed condition. As a simple diet give plain Canary only for the next fortnight, twice in each week half-a-teaspoonful of summer rape separately, and on two other days half-a-teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake or egg food, with two drops of cod-liver oil emulsion well mixed in it. Give a small spray of green food, preferably chickweed, every day. Limit diet solely to these items for the time named. In the drinking water give six drops of dandelion juice, and daily for three days and every second day for the remainder of the first week, as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence. In the second week give two drops each tincture of steel and tincture of gentian every second day. If the looseness is not stopped in the first half of the second week add two drops of tincture of opium to the steel, and gentian in the water for one day only. Do not mate the bird by any means until quite recovered.

A Question of Fertility.

J. E. Simpson.—You will certainly do wrong to remove the cock when the first egg of a clutch has been laid in the hope of finding all the clutch to be fertile. In a few exceptional cases your hopes might be fulfilled, but in the vast majority they would be only doomed to disappointment. With the broader issue of your question, I cannot deal freely here, but, briefly, although cases are on record where a single union has fertilised a whole clutch, such cases must be regarded as wholly exceptional, amongst Canaries, at any rate; and on the other hand, the more general rule is for dozens of apparently successful unions to take place, and get several or perhaps all, of the clutch to prove unfertile. When a portion of any clutch is unfertile, and the cock has been left with the hen all the time, I believe the unfertile eggs are almost, if not quite, invariably the first laid. The question is too closely associated with the health and stamina of the birds for one to dogmatise.

A Doubtful Subject.

Novice.—I hardly see how your bird can have got into the condition you describe if you have consistently carried out the treatment you mention, which, except for Canary cottons as an article of diet, about which I know nothing, is not really bad. Then the hanging cage I should imagine to be an open wire one all round, and although you say it is not exposed to any draughts, you must recognise how extremely difficult it is for a cage of this kind to be free from draughts. See what a few weeks of the following will do for him. Keep cage, and especially the perches, scrupulously clean; and supply clean gritty sand regularly. Feed on plain Canary as a staple, with half-a-teaspoonful of summer rape, given separately, every second day, and on the alternate days the same quantity of crushed sponge cake with two drops of sherry and one of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it, and a few grains of gold of pleasure seed sprinkled over it. Give a spray of green food daily, preferably dandelion leaves. Limit diet solely to this for a fortnight at least, and if he is better in that time gradually revert to the general diet frequently advised here. In the drinking water give six drops of dandelion juice and as much Epsom salts for three consecutive days as will cover a sixpence, and afterwards every second day for the remainder of the week. On the alternate days at the end of the first week give four drops aromatic sulphuric acid. During the second week give two drops each of tincture of gentian and tincture of steel every second day, and twenty drops of chemical food on the alternate days. Bathe the feet once or twice in a warm solution of boracic acid, dry gently, and anoint sparingly with cold cream or pure vaseline.

Moulting.

Perplexed.—You do not say whether these birds moulted properly last autumn, and it is just possible they may now be completing an interrupted moult. Another thing, your dietary is a good deal wrong, and the bird being kept in the living room does not help to mend matters. Altogether, I am afraid mismanagement is the chief cause of the trouble, and I doubt whether the pair of birds will do any good at all. If they have made no further progress with nesting, separate them again until quite sound and in condition. Keep in box cages, well away from fire, so that they are as free as possible from fluctuations, quite out of reach of draughts, and see they are quite free from red mite; keep clean and well supplied with clean, gritty sand. Feed on plain Canary as a staple, and give separately half-a-teaspoonful of summer rape every second day, twice a week a few grains of hemp, and three times a week half-a-teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake or egg food, with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it. Give a spray of green food—chickweed or groundsel—every second day. Discontinue all other items of food you have been giving. In the drinking water give first a pinch of Epsom salts for two days, and afterwards twenty drops of the following mixture every second day. Get a pennyworth of citrate of iron and quinine from your chemist, and dissolve it in two tablespoonfuls of port wine. Use as mentioned above, and on the alternate days give twenty drops of chemical food. It will be useless mating them again until at least a fortnight has elapsed from the complete cessation of moulting.

All the Year Round.

Peter Lowe.—A bird that has been continually moulting for more than twelve months must surely be in a bad way. I should say he is practically certain to occupy a very draughty position, or one where there are great fluctuations of heat, as well as probably being wrongly fed. On the latter point you say nothing. Try what a few weeks of this treatment will do:—Keep him in a box cage, and see it is quite clean and free from red mite and supplied with clean, gritty sand regularly. Keep him in a place perfectly free from all draughts, and where the temperature is as equable as possible. Give plain Canary only as a staple; and every second day give separately half-a-teaspoonful of summer rape; twice a week a few grains only of hemp, and three times a week half-a-teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it. Give a scrap of green food daily, and allow him to bathe when the weather is quite fine and mild, provided he does not get chilled after it. In the drinking water for the first three days give six drops of dandelion juice, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence. After this dissolve a pennyworth of citrate of iron and quinine in two tablespoonfuls of port wine, and give the bird twenty drops of this in the water every second day for a fortnight, and on the alternate days give twenty drops of chemical food. At the end of the fortnight omit all medicines for a week, and then begin again, and give them for another fortnight. The same tactics may be repeated for a third fortnight if necessary.

Owing to the necessity of going to press one day earlier this week, many answers to questions cannot be given until our next issue.—EDITOR.

Brevities.

Both a Little Wrong (Post).—(1) I imagine you have made the mistake of treating the cock for illness without first taking the precaution to remove the cause. See reply to "Peter Lowe" respecting general treatment, and treat your bird similarly as regards protection from draughts and variations of temperature. Also feed the same as given in that reply, and then try the effect of twelve drops of glycerine, six each of syrup of squills and tincture of tolu, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together, for a few days. Give the hen a small spray of chickweed or groundsel daily as green food, and in the drinking water ten drops of syrup of buckthorn for two or three days, as may appear necessary.

Mate for Cinnamon (Pendleton).—Much depends upon how the green parents were bred in selecting a suitable mate for the Cinnamon hen. In the absence of any knowledge on this point I would advise you to mate her with a clear bodied pink-eyed cock bird with the object of breeding some useful for producing Cinnamon-marked young. There is no doubt but that one or both of the green parents of your bird was strongly infused with cinnamon blood.

Pairing Norwich (F. Yardley).—Of course you may mate the Norwich as soon as he is thoroughly recovered from the effects of his prolonged moult. Do not, however, be in any hurry to get him mated. Wait until he is in full song and vigour again, and to help towards this give him a half-teaspoonful of egg food, sprinkled over with a few grains of gold of pleasure seed, every second day, and on each alternate day two leaves of dandelion as green food. Let his general diet be the same as frequently given here, with the above as additions thereto. The young from the proposed mating would be cross-breds, and the bulk of them variegated, more or less heavily. There may be a few slightly ticked, and perhaps a stray green or clear now and again.

Seeds, etc. (Dulais Gardens).—(1) Unless you were using large quantities I do not think you would find it any cheaper to buy seed separately and mix your own than it would be to buy them ready mixed. But why use mixtures except as an occasional tit-bit? Mixtures are rarely suitable for general regular use, and are wasteful, because the birds pick out just what they like best, and scatter the rest in the bottom of the cage. (2) Sorry I cannot for obvious reasons pick out any particular firm for mention here. Consult our advertisement pages, and you will find several good reliable firms who will send you catalogues of all kinds of cages and appliances.

Not Started to Sing (T. Murphy).—You do not give the slightest indication how your birds are fed and treated, so I cannot hazard a guess as to the cause of their not beginning to sing yet. But if they were properly treated, as frequently advised, I should have grave doubts about the sex of supposed cocks that had not yet made any attempts at singing. Try following treatment for a few weeks, and if not successful write again and give some particulars about former treatment. As a staple diet give a mixture of three parts Canary to one summer rape; twice each week give a few grains of hemp; on two other days a few grains of inga; and three times a week half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with four drops of sherry mixed, and a pinch of gold of pleasure sprinkled over. Keep cage clean, and the bird well supplied with clean, gritty sand, and free from draughts and red mites. Give a bath three or four times a week when weather is mild, but see the birds are not exposed to chills after it.

Pairing (Dukeries, W.H.B.S.).—(1) I would not advise you to attempt to mate the hens which have not moulted, and are in the condition you describe. It would be absolutely useless to attempt to breed with them. Had you said where the birds are kept, and given some particulars about their feeding and treatment, I might have suggested a way of pulling them round. As it is, I can only suggest that you feed them on a diet of plain Canary only, with green food daily, and a small pinch of Epsom salts in the water every second day for a week. Meanwhile, write again, and give the particulars asked for, referring to this reply, when I may help you further. (2) You could mate the Norwich cock with a hen bred last season without any serious drawback. If you had a greater choice of hens it would be more advisable to mate a last year's bird with one two years old.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Bullfinch Hen Ailing.

Hopeful of Everything.—I hope you will recognise your nom-de-plume. I don't think the bird is suffering from a cold. You must thoroughly wash out the nostrils and mouth twice daily with warm water coloured light red by the addition of a little Condy's fluid. A tiny camel-hair pencil brush, or feather, will answer to do it with. You could also let its drinking water be tinged with the Condy's, using a glass or pot vessel only, and giving it fresh frequently. This treatment will soon stop and cure the discharge. Let the bird have light food, such as maw and thistle seed, with canary, and some lightly cracked hemp if it seems "off its feed." Soft food would be advisable (milksop or egg and bread), if the bird will eat it. She would probably rejoice over a few buds from hawthorn hedges.

An Opening Disaster.

P. H. W.—I could not offer you any definite opinion concerning the reason your hen failed to rear the four young Mules recently hatched. There are so many possible reasons. Sometimes, too, even the cutest of fanciers cannot explain or understand why a hen fails in her duties. It is possible for a hen to be successful with one nest and a failure with another. And a young hen may go wrong with her first nest (even her first season), and yet be quite a success afterwards. During the early part of the year, the temperature at night often drops very low, and this undoubtedly sometimes throws a hen off her duties, or kills the young. Your own hen may do vastly better next round, even though she made so poor a showing with the last one. She may have had very weakly young ones under her; on the other hand, she may be, of course a "chronic" bad mother. Odd hens there are which absolutely won't feed; and one can't cure them. I note you make no mention of green-food. Surely you gave some? When the next young arrive, you will be able to get and give plenty of seedy chickweed and shepherd's purse; you certainly should.

Feeding a Greenfinch.

Yellow Wing.—Yes; the Finch stock cage, 16ins. long, will "fix up" your Greenfinch splendidly. You won't have much trouble in satisfying him in the food line. The average Greenie is a very lusty fellow, and thrives well, given good quality seeds and an average amount of attention. The most important item is a daily feed of good, sound (full kernelled) sunflower (or half sunflower, half safflower) seed. This can be offered in a separate dish, or placed among the stock mixture. The latter should be made up as follows: Canary and teazle, two pints each, hemp, summer rape, chariock, and linseed half a pint each. Wild seed mixture, and some good maker's special packet Finch mixture, can be occasionally offered for a change, while sunflower heads (gathered from the garden), full of seed, thistle and hard-heads, seeding chickweed, groundsel and shepherd's purse, should be freely given as in season. On such a menu, nicely varied, your Greenfinch should flourish. Don't forget the bath. You should read the "British Bird Manual," to be obtained from this office.

A Blackbird Has Fits.

Mickie.—As I have often had occasion to say, I have not been troubled with birds that have had fits, so my personal experience in the matter is slight. A friend of mine had a Thrush which suffered more or less badly from them, at intervals, and the trouble began just after the moult, as seems so often to be the case. He had not been feeding the bird properly, however; when he changed its diet it recovered. He gave it bromide of potassium as medicine (on my advice), and doubtless this helped; it is reputed to be an excellent remedy for fits in birds. I invariably find, however, that the food of birds addicted to them is faulty (poor). For, for instance, give bread and cracked hemp-seed combined with a certain packet mixture. I suspect there is not much of the latter, either. Now, this food is itself very cheap, and though good value for money, really wants something better mixing with it—not something worse. Let the bird have a finely minced hard-boiled egg among the food occasionally. Instead of using bread and hempseed, get a bag of some good brand of chicken meal (without grit), or puppy meal, from a corn-dealer's, and use this softened with hot water, mixed into the other food (dry) you mention. The latter, used dry, will absorb any superfluous moisture. If you try the potassium, get a 10 per cent. solution of it from a chemist's, and when the bird has an attack, give 8 or 10 drops direct into the beak. Further, for the rest of the day stir a small teaspoonful into two tablespoonfuls of its drinking water. But you must improve the feeding.

Goldfinch Ailing.

M. B.—I am afraid you have left matters till rather late in the day. A Goldfinch is not merely "ailing," but very ill, when he commences to sit with head under wing. Treatment ought really to commence long before that stage is reached. To leave the commencement of treatment until a bird is already three parts dead is, I am afraid, a common error of bird-keepers. If you had treated your bird to a few doses of mild saline medicine as soon as he commenced to sit drowsily about the cage, with his plumage looking slack and puffed out in the region of the abdomen, you might have pulled him round successfully. As medicine give the following for 24 hours: In two tablespoonfuls of drinking water dissolve as much crystals of sulphate of soda as will lie upon a shilling, and stir in half-a-teaspoonful of good brandy. Over the next twenty-four hours give the brandy with half the quantity of soda in the same quantity of water. Tempt the bird to eat by offering thistle, dandelion, niger and maw seeds, mixed. Keep in a room with a just comfortable temperature while ailing; not in an unheated place. Give plenty of sound teazle seed in the stock mixture, and crack him some hemp seed daily as long as is necessary.

Early Hybrid Breeding.

Tavistock.—You are indeed early. Of course, as you say, you are down in the South. Still, I haven't even put my own Hybrid couples together yet. I hope to set them going house-keeping during Easter. You may get good eggs from the Bullie hen; it is a bit doubtful, though. You are quite right in saying that eggs laid irregularly are sometimes fertile; they are, but give me the hen who lays in regular clutches and takes it easy between-times. All the signs you mention are hopeful, of course, but please don't think they spell certain success. Many a poor fellow, as I have said every year since I first wrote a line in CAGE BIRDS, is deluded into believing success within his grasp (1) because the cock bird feeds the hen, (2) because he pays her (and frequently) even more intimate attention, (3) because she duly builds, lays, and sits. I have even known the deluded one post a pæan of exultation for publication in CAGE BIRDS. Whenever I have perused such I have always experienced a strange desire to "wink the other eye"; and no doubt other hardened sinners—that is to say, fanciers—have at the same moment experienced the same curious disturbance of the optic nerves. If only the aforementioned signs really foretold fertile eggs, what numbers of Hybrids we should all of us breed! But, alas! they don't. And the beginner soon finds out this bitter truth, generally much to his exasperation. Good fortune may quite likely visit you. But don't be over sanguine about the earlier eggs; it is usually in the very late clutches that the fertile eggs begin to turn up. Mind you, I don't want to make you think it is so extremely difficult to breed Hybrids. It is not.

British Bird Querists should purchase our "British Bird Manual," published in two parts, "Hard-bills" and "Soft-bills," price 1/- each, or in cloth cover together, 2/3 post free.

Brevities.

Swollen Toe (J. J. N.).—Try painting the swollen toe very lightly twice daily with colourless tincture of iodine, obtainable from any chemist; use a small camel-hair brush. The perches are usually arranged two to three inches apart, so that the wagtail can "walk" from one to the other. Your stock cage, 20 by 15 by 12, is a very fair size. I prefer, however, to see them in a flight cage, myself; my own are 4 to 5 feet long. The perches should always vary considerably in size and shape, and a stone or half-brick can be provided. You must not, by-the-way, omit to give some vegetable ingredient daily in the stock food.

Bird Lice (Novice).—The bird may have been affected when you bought it; or you may have put it into an affected cage. The insects are the grey bird louse. Their presence in such numbers causes the feather trouble, and they will soon cause worse troubles if not exterminated. The bird should be dusted thoroughly with Keating's insect powder, especially under the wings, at root of tail and round the neck, then wrapped in a piece of flannel for about 15 minutes; then put into a temporary cage. The powder must be worked well amongst the plumage; a small camel-hair "mop" brush is handy. Keep it out of the eyes of the bird if at all possible. The old cage should be painted all over with turpentine, letting it run into every crack and crevice, whether in front or otherwise; when dry, distemper it out. Perches, seed and water vessels, must also be washed and cleansed. To complete the cure the bird wants skilfully hand-washing with carbolic soap. Don't you know some experienced fancier who would do it for you? Half measures are no good if one wishes to exterminate lice. You are feeding it fairly well, but see another reply this week.

Caught in the Garden (A. B. V.).—From your description, I should say your bird is a Greenfinch, not a Hawfinch, and probably a hen, though if it shows very pronounced a good lot of yellow at edges of wings and tail, and is really green in body colour, then it may be a cock. Greenies are often mated with Canaries. In our last birthday number (January 19th) there was a very fine drawing of a Hawfinch. There are plenty of fanciers in Coventry who would help you; why not join the cage bird society?

A Wild Bunting (E. Morrell).—Some Buntings are terribly wild, and on these customers ordinary methods of taming have not the slightest effect. I expect you have been unlucky enough to get hold of such an individual. It may improve after a house-moult; quite likely it will. A friend of mine has found hand-washing to have a wonderfully steadying effect. Give your own bird two or three tubbings at reasonable intervals, and see if they cure him.

A Siskin (F. Yardley).—I have found that some Siskins are as "wicked" as most Goldfinches at smashing eggs; the safe plan is to part them off when nothing is known as to their disposition. I should give the Siskin a second chance, if first clutch of Canaries' eggs proves clear. It is very early yet. The hen need only sit eight or ten days if eggs prove no good. If the Siskin behaves well, certainly give him a chance to help feed the young. You should have tried the Canary cock for the first nest, and the Britishers for the later nests; that would have been best.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

What Parrot is it?

T.J.E.—It is an Alexandrine. You have given full value; in fact, rather overpaid for it, as I fear you have got hold of a bird which was caught when adult. Such are very difficult to tame, and I can quite understand your description—"docile as a tiger." I prefer the seed mixture given in reply to other Parrot queries. I should also give ripe fruit, plain biscuit, and a few nuts. You can give the boiled potato providing it has not been seasoned in any way, also the green stuff. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food. The female lacks the black neck ring. This species is rather noisy, but as its vocabulary becomes larger, and it becomes more accustomed to you, it will scream less. Kindness and patience are all you can do in the way of taming it. Keep it in your midst, but at the same time avoid, when in its vicinity, sudden movements, or anything calculated to scare or startle it.

Amazon Not Talking.

"S.L.S."—Sometimes the change of surroundings throws a Parrot off talking for some time, but when healthy they soon get used to their surroundings and new owners, gain confidence, and become talkative. You must so arrange that the bird does not get rice pudding; in fact, milk or other slops, table scraps, and animal food of any kind must not be given, or treatment will be of no avail. Diet: principally seed mixture; mixture two parts Canary and one part each oats, hemp, wheat, dari, maize, and sunflower seed; well mix, and keep a supply continuously in cage; also supply ripe fruit, plain biscuits, nuts, grit and cuttlefish regularly. Two or three times a week a little boiled maize is appreciated by most Amazons, and is quite permissible. Boil till soft, strain away all surplus moisture and supply when cool. This only keeps fresh one day, and the seed vessel must be kept strictly clean. A little plain boiled rice would do no harm as it is used to rice. Boil it in water only till soft, strain and steam, and when cool supply to the bird; if properly prepared, each grain will be quite soft and separate, and it will not be a sticky mass. As regards the indisposition, give one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water every other day for a week, or longer if the evacuations do not become watery. Get from your chemist a box of honey and borax, and put a little in the bird's mouth daily for a fortnight; you can easily do this with a feather or camel-hair brush, even if the bird will not permit you to handle it. The brush or feather should be well cleansed, and a fresh portion of the honey and borax used for each occasion. If the bird should become worse, repeat query at once with full details.

Amazon Parrot Indisposed.

"Low."—For diet see reply to "S.L.S.," and feed your bird on same lines. For one day only put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water (one ounce). Get from your chemist the following mixture: Ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills, and glycerine in equal parts. For use, take one part of the mixture and two parts of water, and let the birds have a drink morning and evening till the cough ceases. The Amazon is a hardy species once it has got over the hardships of importation, but no bird can stand draught, not even the most hardy species, and colds usually arise from the birds being subjected to draught while the room is being aired, dusted, etc., in early morning. During such periods the cage should be kept covered, as colds are much more easily prevented than cured. Do not on any account give tea, coffee, or milk slops, nor yet any kind of animal food.

Grey-headed Lovebirds.

"Jerry."—With the exception of green-food and a few oats your dietary is very satisfactory. As to green-food, a little ripe apple is best at present, but when you can get grass in flower (grass in the ear) free from frost, supply this ad lib. The husk nest is hung up in the correct position, but Lavender, or Grey-headed Lovebirds, are shy breeders in captivity, not often breeding even in an aviary. They differ from Budgerigars in that they line their nests with bark, etc., and you must supply them with short pieces of tree branches with the bark on; pea or bean sticks, broken into suitable lengths for the cage would answer well, removing these as soon as the birds have stripped off the bark, and replacing them with fresh pieces. There is a probability they may breed, and, at any rate, it will supply them with healthy exercise, and make them of increased interest to watch, even if nothing comes of the attempt. A little crushed egg-shell should be mingled with the sand if they attempt nesting in earnest.

Foreign Bird Querists will find in our handbook, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1, and "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," 6d. post free, a mine of information of use and interest.

Naming of Species.

M.A.—According to your description, you have a pair of Red-whiskered Bulbuls; also known as Red-eared. Bulbuls should have access to seed—millet and Canary—but their principal diet must be a good soft food mixture (see reply to "Mynah.") This mixture, with the addition of crumbled sponge cake, would answer for this species well; give ripe fruit and a few mealworms or other insects regularly. No, I do not take it to be diarrhœa, but the evacuations are, as you describe, owing to the nature of their diet; they will ultimately take to the soft food mixture. As soon as the weather appears settled they will be better in your outdoor aviary, and though there will be occasional sparring, but Bulbuls can usually hold their own in any company. A fortnight hence it should be quite safe to put them out, and they can then be left out altogether.

Value of a "King" Grey.

Folkestone.—Most certainly when answering queries I am serious, and endeavour to say as plainly as possible what I mean in my replies, and also as lucidly as the limited space at my command will permit. In the first place I am not a buyer and seller of birds, but I keep a constant eye on the market as a purchaser of rare species for the purposes of study. The portion of my reply was tersely worded, but I hoped my meaning would be obvious. I was speaking of dealers' values, and the bulk of Parrot advertisements refer to newly imported species, and I certainly would not give more than 25s. to 30s. for such, which appeared to be in health and good plumage. A bird said to be in moult, King or otherwise, I would not take at a gift. Folkestone will find that length of time a bird has been in England and talking capacity do count in the value of a bird, and are the governing factors where fancy prices are concerned. I can only refer you to watch the adverts. Prices vary. If I knew of one (which I do not at the moment) I am not permitted to give names in this column, and rightly so. If I wanted a King myself, I should wait my time, and watch the market. I can only say again, the King (so-called) is merely a local race of the Grey Parrot, and has no specific distinction. King is a fancy name, used principally for trading purposes, and as I said in my previous reply, "I do not consider a King has any special value, though a little more is charged for them when it can be obtained." And on this point I fear we shall have to agree to differ. I shall be pleased to answer anything further that I have not made clear above.

Brevities.

Treatment for Rock Mynah ("Mynah").—The cage should be roomy for so large and active a bird. As regards food, they are almost omnivorous, so it can have such table scraps as it will eat, ripe fruit ad lib., and some live insects, mealworms, beetles, cockroaches, smooth caterpillars, spiders, etc. Some good soft food mixture should form its staple diet. Several good ones are advertised in our columns, or if you wish to mix your own: Two parts each ants' eggs, dried flies, and game meal, and one part fine ground crinel. Well mix and store in a dry place in some closed receptacle; it will thus keep indefinitely. Take the daily portion, and make crumbly moist for use. Most of this species both whistle, mimic and talk; keep it where it will have plenty of company, yet not be continually scared; also teach it by constant repetition.

Branches for Aviary ("Park Aviary").—I do not think the Cedar branches would do hurtful at all, but I have never tried these. Box and fir and hazel are, however, quite safe and very suitable for the purpose. I should think you would have almost an unlimited choice of material ready to hand, without using anything doubtful. I have used holly, plane, all kinds of fruit, euonymus and privet branches, and have found all quite innocuous.

Indian Parrot Bare of Plumage (E. Cornwall).—Continue to keep up the wholesome diet, and the bird will improve. You must not overdo the Epsom salts; the bowels should be kept moving freely, but the evacuations should not be watery. I should advise a teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia in the drinking water (one ounce) in place of the salts. Continue the chemical food indefinitely. If the bird will eat it, give it a tablespoonful of boiled maize daily; boil till soft, drain off all possible moisture, and well dust the maize with flowers of sulphur. It will do no harm to rub in a little clean vaseline once a week, so as to keep the skin soft, but do not make it really greasy. I fear it is a feather puller, and after such a period improvement must of necessity be slow.

Crossing Sulphur Seed-eater with Canary ("Serinus").—(1) No, the Sulphur Seed-eater is not the same species as the Green Singing Finch. The former is S. sulphuratus, and the latter S. icterus. Sulphuratus is a bird almost as large as our Greenfinch, and of similar build, but has more yellow in its plumage. (2) Most certainly I consider there is a very good probability that this species would cross with the Canary, almost as readily as our Greenfinch does; there is only one qualification, few foreigners being as ready to nest in captivity as Britishers. However, I consider there is more than a possibility, but a strong probability that your experiment will be crowned with success.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a report direct 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the less will be the sender's.

Canary (W. H. Williams).—Items descriptive of duration and symptoms of illness would have been helpful in forming an opinion as to the cause of death. The body showed evidence of blood-poisoning (or Septicæmia), with ulceration and inflammation of the lungs.

Canary (G. M. Osborne).—Rupture of blood vessel of liver. This organ and bowels appear to be in a feverish condition.

GENERAL.

Answered by the Editor.

Readings (E. G. Cornwell).—You are quite correct; it was solely owing to considerations of space that the giving of the questions had to be discontinued. It is now often a tax upon our pages to get every answer in, so heavy are the batches of queries our specialists receive. We always endeavour, however, to have the answer so worded that the question asked can be grasped by all readers.

Not as Ordered (Bars and Wire).—If you keep the goods, there the matter has necessarily to end, unless the vendor chooses to give you an explanation. You could either (1) have refused the goods, having previously cancelled the order, or (2) returned the goods on the ground that they were not as specified in your order. In either case, you would have had a legal claim (taking the account you give to be accurate) for the return of your money, and could have enforced it.

Black Canary Puzzle (Master R. Wright).—The result appeared in our issue of February 26th last, on page 177. The winner was Miss Jenkins (Wood Green). A letter sent to you has been returned through the Post Office, the address being apparently either insufficient or incorrect.

Letter (A. J. B. O'Neill).—The letter has been duly sent along.

Two Points (One in Doubt, K. Jones).—Your two questions were answered by our Mr. G. E. Weston, in our issue of March 13th last, under the above heading. Offence?—of course not. Here's to your good health.

Type of the Norwich Plainhead (John Hector).—Opinion upon artistic work differs as much as opinion upon individual birds, and on the same principle as we decline to allow criticism upon show reports, we must decline to publish your letter. Whether our artist sketched the birds correctly or otherwise is a matter which more concerns the owners of the birds and himself than it does anyone else.

SLAYDON AND DISTRICT C.B.S

Monthly meeting held on April 3rd, when there was a large turn-out of members. Mr. J. Hands gave a very interesting address on Crests and Crest-breds. The members also decided that all prize-money at next show be guaranteed. Three new members were elected.—G. HAYVER, Sec.

WOODSIDE & BUCKSBURN C.S.

Meeting held March 24th, in the Northern Hotel, Aberdeen, when Mr. Peter Stewart was appointed president in place of the late Mr. J. Thomson. The following gentlemen were appointed judges for the society's annual show, to be held in the Burgh Hall, Woodside, on November 20th:—Messrs. C. Campbell (Glasgow), for Norwich, and D. Ross (Forres) for Crests, Cinnamons, and Greens, and the wild bird classes.—ALEX. THOMSON, Sec.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

Usual meeting held April 3rd, in the Fawcett Street Cafe, Mr. J. Farrar presiding over a good attendance of members. Usual correspondence having been gone through, the secretary's report for 1908 was read, giving in detail the working of the association, and also the present financial position and future prospects, which were considered highly satisfactory. The report was carried unanimously. Mr. G. Davidson moved that the best thanks of the members be accorded to Mr. J. Riseborough and Dr. O'Neal for services rendered to the society, and also to the secretary for compiling the report. This was carried unanimously. Messrs. J. Copeland and G. Davidson were elected auditors. Two new members were proposed, Dr. Gray and Mr. R. Haswell. It was decided that we guarantee to advertise the dates of our annual show, November 19th and 20th, in CAGE BIRDS to the usual extent. We are now entirely free from debt, and will have the whole of the present year's income to work upon. This fact is rousing our members to even greater enthusiasm than they have already displayed, and we have every hope that our record for the present year will be one to be proud of. Fanciers are cordially invited to join.—W. REID, hon. secretary.

LANCASHIRE AND LIZARD F.A.

We had a most enthusiastic and largely attended meeting on April 3rd, held at the Old Boar's Head, Manchester. The meeting comprised fanciers from Oldham, Shaw, Glossop, Middleton, Prescot, Manchester, Denton, Rawtenstall, etc. Patronage, correspondence, etc., were gone into, and subscriptions. The novice question was fully discussed, and a scheme carried that seems likely to be a success; and as the novices seem likely to be plentiful and enthusiastic, there is every prospect of a prosperous season. I little imagined when writing the report of our last meeting to have such a response of new members. We had been promised three or four, but when that was doubled and more were promised it was a pleasant surprise. We made eight new members, namely, Messrs A. Wellings (Prescot), J. Lee (Castleton), J. Tompston (son of our old friend Sam), J. H. Senior (Glossop), B Salway (West Gorton), W. Ridgard (West Gorton), W. Adams (Rochdale), the secretary of the Lancashire C.C., and A. Bosworth (Rawtenstall)—not bad for one evening's work. We also proposed having a list of judges from our own members, and the five following well-known specialist judges were appointed:—Messrs. J. Garner (Hazel Grove), Barker Clegg (Manchester), W. P. Barnes (Grantham), A. Wellings (Prescot), and J. Swalwell. We should be pleased if any societies having our patronage would, whenever possible, appoint a judge from above, as they are all well-tried men, and fanciers who could mostly give a good account of themselves in other varieties. Mr. Garner having won the Lancashire challenge cup outright, it was unanimously agreed to purchase a new cup, and the following amounts were promised, viz., Messrs. Garner 5s., A. Wellings 5s., J. Vickers 5s., J. Swalwell 5s., J. Oldham 5s., J. Dickinson 2s. 6d., J. J. Brookes 2s. 6d., and J. Rukin 5s.; total, 35s. If any other fancier would like to contribute to the fund, I shall be pleased to hear from him. The social side then came into evidence in the presentation of the cup and medals to the winners. In presenting the cup to Mr. Garner, we had quite a good speech from Mr. Hampshire, of Oldham. Mr. Garner suitably replied, and also stated that he did not intend to compete for the new cup when put up for competition. Mr. Garner then presented Mr. Brookes with the gold medal for most points by a novice in Lancashire classes, for which Mr. Brookes expressed his thanks, but refused to be drawn into any speech-making. Mr. Dewsnap was then presented with the Lizard cup, and gave us a short speech, the gist of which was that he hoped there would be a fresh claimant next season. Mr. Dickinson came next as winner of the Lizard novice gold medal, but he also struck at giving a speech. The rest of the evening was spent very pleasantly, and a vote of thanks to our chairman, Mr. Garner, brought the meeting to a close. The next meeting we hold at the Old Boar's Head, Manchester, on May 1st, at 6.30 p.m. I shall be pleased to hear of any new members to propose Subscription is 5s.—JOHN RUKIN, hon. secretary.

The English Mocking Bird.

Our greatest feathered mimic is undoubtedly the Starling, and he has, therefore, at times been called the "English Mocking Bird." He is not by any means a loud songster, but if one listens carefully it is easy to detect the notes of several of our best singers. He should also be called the clown of the race, for many of his best efforts are more comical than elegant.

A Rare Migrant.

The red-necked Phalarope breeds sparingly in the British Isles, although it would, no doubt, like many other rare birds, increase in number under proper protection. This species is particularly noticeable on account of the great difference in the sexes, the hen bird being much the larger and more brightly coloured. She, of course, lays the eggs, but beyond this is said to take no further part in the incubation of them. This duty falls upon the very much hen-pecked cock bird. Its breeding haunts are on the moors near the sea. The nest is merely a hollow in the ground, scantily lined with grass and a few scraps of rushes. The bird is remarkably tame and confiding during the breeding season, which no doubt has aided considerably in its destruction.

Was it a Fight?

While dredging for scallops in Salcombe Harbour, it is reported that a couple of gentlemen were startled to hear something drop with a splash close to their boat, and it was found that a dead Rook had fallen into the water. Their attention was then directed overhead, where a large number of Rooks were circling round and round as if a fierce fight were taking place, and it was evident that great excitement prevailed. In a very short time another bird fell into the water, and in about five minutes seven had fallen within a small radius around the boat, all of them dead. Naturalists describe the Rook as a great fighter, and it is conjectured that a battle was taking place; others, however, attribute the incident to the birds have eaten wheat treated with strychnine.

A QUESTION OF THE JUDGE.

SIR,—The annual show of the Tideswell C.B.I.S. will be held on November 13th, the judges being Messrs. W. Mundell (Bradford) and W. Vardy (Hucknall). My reason for sending these few lines is that I notice that the Nottingham Society claim to have engaged Mr. Vardy for that date. I may say that that gentleman was engaged to judge for us in January last, and I thought it best to make mention of this to save further disappointment.

A. FLINT, Joint Hon. Sec.

A SINGING CHALLENGE.

SIR,—Noticing a challenge from Leigh in last week's issue, I should be extremely obliged if you would allow me a few lines in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, to inform all readers that, owing to business, I retired from contest-singing nearly twelve months ago, and am now training birds for my customers. I have had thirty years' practice at singing birds on the nail and in the fields, and I am always pleased to hear tell of a good bird, both in the window and on the show bench.

HARRY ALLEN.

WHAT IS A CLEAR?

SIR,—I noticed in your issue of April 3rd, in reference to the question, "What is a Clear?" that the Norwich Plainhead Club have passed a bye-law to the effect "that a bird showing no dark feathers while standing on the perch is eligible to compete in the Clear classes." What about a ticked bird being sent to a show to compete in Clear classes, which, say, takes twelve hours or more to get to its destination? That bird is sure to sit a little thick for a few hours after being unpacked, and will then show no signs of dark feathers. As a rule at most shows the Clear Norwich Plainheads are generally the first to be judged, and the bird is sure to get passed by the judge as an "invisible" ticked or marked bird. But after the bird has been fed and watered, and gets over its railway journey, and feels the warmth of the show room, it will often, if a ticked bird, show the dark feathers. That is where the dissatisfaction of exhibitors comes in; and the judge gets a bad name, although the bird did not show the dark feathers at the time of judging. My idea is, and always will be, that a ticked or marked Norwich Plainhead, wherever it is marked, is not eligible to compete in Clear classes and should go in its proper class, viz., ticked or variegated.

R. J. MACKLEY.

SIR,—I was very pleased indeed to see the paragraph in last week's CAGE BIRDS to the effect that the Norwich Plainhead Club had passed a bye-law to the effect that "A bird showing no dark feathers while standing on the perch is eligible to compete in the Clear Classes." I feel sure this is a step in the right direction, and it is very gratifying to know that a body of breeders, such as usually gathers at the meeting of the Norwich Plainhead Club, does not believe in the unnecessary handling of exhibition birds, for such a decision would not be arrived at without the question had been fully discussed. It would be pleasing to see the other Norwich and Yorkshire Specialist clubs "following suit." A great many societies last year worded their schedules something similar to the new bye-law passed by the N.P.C., and from what I can hear I believe that next show season it will be the rule rather than the exception.

W. REID.

THE ALLEGED DISQUALIFIED YELLOWHAMMER AT GLASGOW AND WEST OF SCOTLAND SHOW.

SIR,—The matter of the alleged disqualification, at our last open show in November, 1908, of a Yellowhammer belonging to Mr. M. Craig, was brought up at our meeting on March 25th, no doubt because of the action of the Scottish British Bird and Mule Club in expelling Mr. Craig for this alleged infringement of their rules. In opening the matter, our rule (No. 8) bearing on incidents of this kind was read, viz., "All birds which, in the opinion of the judges, have been artificially assisted to improve their appearance, to be referred to the president, who, along with three members of committee, will decide whether they be allowed to compete or not, the decision of the judges or committee to be final." The secretary informed the meeting that he had had no intimation from any of the judges that any irregularities had been noted, nor had any of the other officials intimated anything of this nature. The president stated that he had not been approached by Mr. Cochrane, the judge, so also did the show manager and the steward attending Mr. Cochrane. But as the defender, who was present, stated that Mr. Cochrane had informed the S.B.B. and M.C. that he had reported the infringement to Mr. McPhail, the show manager, and Mr. Geddes, the steward, these gentlemen were again questioned. Both were firm and decisive in their assurances that neither the judge, nor any other person had reported to or conferred with them about the bird in question, and as our rules had not been complied with, we had, of course, to let the matter drop. Our members desire to make these details known through the press, in the hope that no difficulty of this kind may be encountered again. Our rules are formed for the protection of exhibitors and judges alike, and surely it is the duty of the officiating gentlemen to give the committee every assistance to carry out these rules as fairly and honestly as possible; besides, the intimation and co-operation of the committee free the judges from the possible charge of malice or personal enmity, and surely even the best of judges are wise to avoid even the appearance of prejudice.

R. A. BROWN,
Secretary, Glasgow and West of Scotland N.M.B. and F.B.C.

MAKING REMOVABLE WIRE FRONTS.

SIR,—I see in the April 3rd issue of CAGE BIRDS that a reader asks what things are required for making loose wire fronts. The first thing required, I may say, are the punch bars and wires, which he can get from a maker. Tools, etc., required, are a soldering iron, spirits of salts, a stick of tinsmith solder, a pair of wire cutting pliers, and a flat file. Assuming you have got the above, the first thing to do is to "kill" the spirits of salt. This is done by pouring a little into a jar—about half a teacupful. To this you add some waste pieces of sheet zinc, say, 15 pieces or so, of about 1in. square. This should stand in the yard till it has finished boiling. It will then be "killed" and ready for use. The next thing to do is to tin your soldering iron, which is done by heating the copper part of it (not red-hot, mark you); then clean by filing the four faces about ¾in. up. Dip this into the "killed" spirits. Now put it on the stick of solder and then into the spirits again sharp. You will now see that you have got a tin face on the iron. On no account get the iron red-hot when it is in use, or you will take the face off it again. But have it sufficiently hot to melt the solder well. Assuming that you have cut punch bars and wires to suit, you now run the spirits along the parts to be soldered with a small brush or piece of wood. You now take the soldering iron, which should be nice and hot, and take sufficient solder on the face from off the stick and lightly run the iron along parts to be soldered. A little practice will soon convince one. On no account use the raw spirits. The spirits of salts is bought at the chemist's at 3d. per lb. A stick of solder at a tinsmith's costs only a few pence. The alloys of good tinsmith solder are one part lead and two parts tin. A soldering iron, the copper part weighing about ½lb., will be found a handy size for making punch bar fronts. I think the above instructions will be handy for those about to make wire fronts.

J. G. ROBBINS.

SIR,—Kindly allow me through CAGE BIRDS an answer to a letter signed by C.S. enquiring as to the way to make soldered cage fronts. I myself should strongly recommend him not to take up the game, especially if he is an amateur at the job, as cage fronts can be purchased far better and cheaper than it is possible to make them. There are several very excellent fronts on the market, some of which I can strongly recommend.

FRENCH CHALK AND BOWEL TROUBLES.

SIR,—Having read in your admirable paper CAGE BIRDS a letter by Mr. J. Barber, headed "How I keep my Song Thrushes and Skylarks," I should very much like to ask him through your paper if the French chalk which he uses to put the birds' bowels right applies to British Hardbills as well as to Softbills, and how to use it? I shall thank Mr. Barber for his kind answer and CAGE BIRDS for the good hints we can read in it.

A NOTED LINNET.

SIR,—But for silence being taken for consent, I would not reply to Mr. Parlett's letter. I am not a "would-be" exhibitor, as he states, having won more prizes at the principal shows than he has done. Further, I am certain that I have won more first prizes with Bullfinches than he has done with Linnets, or, for that matter, is ever likely to do. Mr. Parlett suggests my extracting the beam from my eye, and says that then I will see more clearly the next time to judge Bullfinches. I am glad to be able to inform him that I have no beam to extract from my eye, also that I have always seen quite clearly when judging Bullfinches or any other variety. I am not to take any notice of further letters from him on this subject, and my doing so must not be held as acquiescing in anything he may write inconsistent with fact.

F. A. WATT.

P.S.—Since writing the above I have learned that Mr. Parlett's Linnet, which he named "The Unbeaten," was not entitled to such a designation, as on the 26th December last it was beaten at the Doncaster Show by a grand Linnet belonging to Mr. Nicholson, of York. That Mr. Parlett was keenly disappointed at the reverse was evident by the remarks he made on the judge's decision. I venture to say that a true fancier would not have spoken as he did on that occasion, and his doing so rather went to show that he was "a would-be exhibitor." A true fancier would have taken his bird's defeat like a man by making no remarks on the judge's decision (who, by the way, knew a Linnet as well, if not better, than Mr. Parlett).

A SELF-ACTING FOUNTAIN FOR AVIARIES.

SIR,—I enclose a sketch of a self-acting fountain for aviaries, the cost of which is about 2s. 6d. The vessels (or "tanks") are made from common tin washing bowls, costing 5d. each. One, to form the base, has a piece of tinned iron soldered on. The tube is quarter-inch gas-piping; the cocks are quarter-inch full-way gas cocks, price 5d. each. The plug is cut from an ordinary cork. The illustration, I think, explains itself. I need only say that you pour water into the top vessel till it is half-full, turn on cock A1, when water passes down to the air chamber, and is forced (by the air) into tube B. You open cock B1, and the result is a continual playing of a jet from C. An ordinary "pin" gas burner will answer. The jet will be from 12 to 15 inches high, and last until all the air which was present in the bottom chamber before we turned on cock A1 is exhausted—that is, about three hours. Then

Mr. Hawes' Fountain.

A is the tube leading from the top container into the bottom air chamber. A1 is the supply cock (tap) to the same. B is the casting tube, through which the water is forced upward and expelled in a fine spray, or jet. B1 is the controlling air cock. C is the casting jet. D is the plug to control the supply of water. E is the water tank. E2 is the air tank. F is the tap for emptying the fountain when not in use, to prevent rusting.

a fresh supply must be put into the containers, when the performance will be repeated. A person handy with the soldering iron can make one of these fountains in two hours, as the tube can be bought cut to size desired.

H. J. HAWES.

SIR,—I enclose a sketch of a very satisfactory self-acting fountain. It is shown here on two upright supports (such as table legs), with two shelves for the tanks (represented by the dotted lines), which can be either wood, wood laths, or flat iron bars. The two tanks B and C and the top water vessel A should be made of thin sheet zinc, though tin, of course, will do. A good size for the tanks is 8 by 6 by 6 inches. The spray is thrown from a piece of brass blow-pipe, which passes from A into B, finishing half-inch from the bottom of B. The height of the jet of water is regulated by the tap No. 1 in the downfall pipe. The latter is soldered into the bottom of A, and passes down the side of B into C, finishing half-inch from the bottom of the latter tank. The air-pipe should be soldered from the top of C, through B, to within one inch of the top of the latter tank (note sketch). The inlet pipe to tank B (at top right-hand side) should be plugged tight with a cork. For the various tubes, three-eighth inch metal or compo tubing is best. To start the fountain, fill the tank B through the inlet pipe. It is easy to tell when it is full, as the water will overflow down the air pipe into C. Then replace the cork or plug, tightly (air-tight). Then fill the basin, or pan A with water, and turn on tap No. 1. The water will pass down the pipe into C, and the result of this will be to displace the air in C, causing it to pass up the air-pipe into B. The air pressure here will cause the water in this tank to be forced up the blow-pipe, and so form the fountain. The height of the spray can be regulated by tap No. 1. It should run for three or four hours. When the fountain has finished playing, the tank C will be full of water, and tank B empty. To start again, empty C by tap No. 2, pour back into B, and replace the plug and turn on tap No. 1. I assisted a friend of mine to make a fountain like this about seven years ago, so I know it will work. Great care, however, must be taken to have all parts air-tight. The tank B should always be placed as near A as possible, and the tank C as low as possible, so as to allow as much drop as possible.

THE CAGE BIRD FANCY IN BARTON AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—Once more I trespass upon your valuable space to answer Mr. Chamberlain. Now, Mr. C., you accuse me of wavering from the point. I had to, in order to answer your letter. Do you think your little bit of—shall we call it modesty? re your 300 birds, etc., sticking to the point? And if I may speak in metaphor, let me tell you I can (in Barton vernacular) pelt a cobble on the right side of a hedge, at the same time aiming at the people who made the stone heap. But, seriously, don't please think I want you and our hon. secretary to be at loggerheads (as you mean to infer). No, sir, I'll take a sporting chance, and take all the blame. Just one word on the "room" question. It was the minority that left us, so to all sensible minds it shows the majority was satisfied. You have got the room you wanted; so have we. Thanks for your remark respecting my pal and me. I voice all the club when I say it is a good job for many things there are two clubs. I concede you one point, re the young bird; you have me on the hip. As for "examples" and "futuro conduct," I don't care a brass button what your future conduct may be, but I will say, in conclusion, that I honestly wish your club the success it deserves.

COXHOE AND DISTRICT C.B S.

Sir,—A number of fanciers in the Coxhoe district have commenced a Cage Bird Society, and invite all fanciers in the district to join. Contributions aro 1s. per month. Any fancier wishing to join may do so by attending a meeting in the Tyneside Inn, Coxhoe, on Tuesday, April 20th, at 7.30 p.m. This is the last meeting for onrolling new members.

W. J. Mudd, Sec.

West-terrace, Coxhoe.

THE CONSTRUCTION OF AN OUTDOOR BIRDROOM.

Sir,—I think the suggestion of F. Amos in your last issue, to substitute the Russian ply boards for the match boarding for lining is a very good one. The only drawback would be with regard to the packing of the recess between the boards with shavings, etc.; this would be a little more difficult. I may say that I use the ply wood for the backs of my cages, and find it extra good for this purpose, as there is no harbour for redmite.

J. W. Lawton.

THE MIDLAND COUNTIES YORKSHIRE CANARY CLUB.

Sir,—I am endeavouring, through the medium of club secretaries, to reach all breeders of the Yorkshire Canary in the radius adopted by the Midland Counties Yorkshire Canary Club. At the same time it will be apparent that some fanciers are certain to be overlooked, and I would take this opportunity of asking them to send me a postcard, on receipt of which I will send them all necessary information along with a copy of our rules.

THE BORDER FANCY CANARY IN THE SOUTH.

Sir,—I was very pleased to see Mr. Smith's spirited reply to the remarks of "Wee McGregor," and trust he may continue on the same straightforward lines on which he has commenced in his hobby. The Border Fancy Canary, I am sure, is safe in his hands, as seemingly he has paid great attention to the exhibits at the several shows he mentions he has visited. He, at least, has not been long in seeing that there is a great difference in type, even if the eyes of this wonderful "Wee McGregor" have been closed to the fact. I trust to see this subject thrashed out in a friendly manner, and all for the advancement of our wee pets, which are yearly gaining ground all over the United Kingdom. As I have already said, they are like Noah's family —wherever they go they increase and multiply. Mr. Eagle-Bott's letter (wherein I see he is also for the bird with a free neck) bears out my contentions, and I daresay, after we have a few more letters and exchanges of opinion, perhaps a better understanding will be arrived at. As to the size to breed up to, the rules of the B.F.C.C. say: "Size not to exceed 5½in. in length, measured in the usual way." Personally, as I have already said, I prefer them rather under, if anything. At the same time, let us keep to the standard size as far as possible.

J. Patterson.

PROPOSED NORTHERN YORKSHIRE CANARY UNION.

Sir,—I have yet to learn how it is that some "Yorkshire Fanciers" in Cumberland, having so strong a desire to further the interests of this variety, have not taken steps to associate themselves with a club (the Cumberland Y.C.C.) whose objects and interests have all along been identical with theirs, and whose sole desire has been to encourage and promote the breeding and exhibiting of the Yorkshire Canary in Cumberland. I note Mr. Park says in his letter: "We were not sure of the C.Y.C.C. being still in existence, as it seemed to have gone quiet some time ago" His next sentence explains exactly the reason for that quietness. "I do not care to bother myself with its affairs," he says. Now, Mr. Park, you will pardon my saying so, but if Yorkshire fanciers in Cumberland "had cared to bother themselves with its affairs" we should have had, and can have yet, a good and strong club, not necessarily confined to Cumberland, but including North or the whole of Lancashire for the matter of that. You ask my opinion of your proposed scheme. I presume the detailed scheme of Mr. Bradley and your own are identical. I will give you my opinion for what it is worth, but before going further, I wish it to be distinctly understood that if anything I have already said may have given offence to my fellow fanciers in Millom or anywhere else in the county, I am truly sorry, as I did it unintentionally; I have no desire to raise up matters the discussion of which can do no one any good. Now to the scheme (as proposed in detail in Mr. Bradley's letter), to be worked on the same principle as the Cage Bird Union. How many of the societies mentioned would be willing to contribute the sum of 7s. 6d. or 10s. to a Specialist Club, catering only for its own members? In the first place three of the 13 societies mentioned have no existence at all. I refer to Frizington, Maryport, and Workington, who have not held a show for many years. Let us take Egremont, for example, or Cleator Moor; as far as I am aware they have not a single Yorkshire fancier on their committees. Then, how could we reasonably expect these committees to grant 7s. 6d. or 10s. to a fund to provide a cup or anything else that their own members could not compete for? There are also other societies in the list given whose Yorkshire members are in the minority, and I fancy it would be extremely difficult to get the majority to give way, in the vague hope that Yorkshire classes would greatly benefit thereby. It would, no doubt, answer well for the early shows, but my opinion is that as one or two members get well ahead in points, the others gradually drop out. No, Sir, I am inclined to think that of late years the societies mentioned have had quite enough to do to hold their own, and they are to be considered fortunate if they have succeeded in doing that. I know in some cases the 7s. 6d. paid to the C.B.U. can ill be spared; besides, Mr. Bradley doesn't suggest, surely, that if a society refuses to pay the fee asked, he would not give the patronage? Personally, I think if medals were given for competition at each show it would benefit all the societies and increase the entries, especially if the membership was large; and if it had that result I don't think any of the societies would be against giving a subscription to the funds. I am sure the societies I have mentioned will pardon me for bringing them into the discussion, and as I have no right to speak for them. I should be pleased to have the opinion of the various secretaries concerned, no matter how brief, if only to say whether or not they are in favour of the scheme. At the same time I should like to have the names of all Yorkshire fanciers in Cumberland or Lancashire desirous of joining our society, and I venture to express the hope that they will do so at an early date.

J. Ferguson, Hon. Sec. C.Y.C.C.

CORSEINON P.P. AND CAGE BIRD SOCIETY'S RECENT SHOW.

Sir—Consequent on a slight mistake in making out cheques for prize-money awarded to exhibitors at the last show of the above society, some have been returned by the bank. The Committee would esteem it a great favour if these prize-winners would return their cheques to me in order that they may be officially stamped and thus ensure their being duly honoured. The Committee also invite those gentlemen who have not yet received their cheques to communicate with me, and thus set at rest any misconceptions as to the bona-fides and financial standing of the above society. On behalf of the Committee,

Thos. Rogers, Deputy-Chairman.

A TREAT FOR METROPOLITAN BREEDERS OF YORKSHIRES.

Sir,—We have completed arrangements with that popular and versatile judge, Mr. W. Mundell, of Bradford, for a lecture by him on "The Yorkshire Canary," which he will deliver at the next meeting of the London and Provincial O.S., on Thursday, April 15th, at "The Raglan," Aldersgate-street. This is in response to the request of several of our members, who felt disappointed at the failure of our attempt to secure a lecture on the variety for the March meeting. Mr. Mundell's last visit taxed the holding capacity of the usual meeting-room to its utmost, so we have arranged to have seating accommodation in a larger room. This is an unique opportunity of hearing the latest about the "bird of grace and beauty" by one who has little to learn on the subject, and in the name of the L.P.O.S. I offer a hearty welcome (and seats) to any interested fanciers, and can promise them a most interesting and instructive evening.

Hon. Sec. L. and P.O.S.

CAGE BIRD UNION (District No. 1).

Sir,—A meeting of the above was held at Lockhart's Cafe, 37, Clayton-street, Newcastle-on-Tyne, on Wednesday, March 31st. Mr. T. Robson occupied the chair. Business of considerable importance was dealt with, arising from a large pile of correspondence, which was submitted to the delegates. Show dates were fixed as far as circumstances would allow. Two new affiliations were represented at the meeting in the persons of Mr. Staig, for Alnwick, and Mr. Irvine for Cramlington. The meeting had to be adjourned at 10.15, some business being still unfinished.

SOME QUESTIONS FOR PARROT FANCIERS.

Sir,—Would some of your numerous readers give me the following information, through the medium of your valuable paper, Cage Birds? I have had an African Grey Parrot in my possession for over ten years, and during that period she never laid any eggs until last summer. If I put a cock bird with her, and she laid some eggs, would they be fertile? Also, how could I distinguish a cock from a hen; is there any difference in their plumage? I would very much like to have a trial at breeding. Also, I would like to know what kind of cage to breed them in.

Thomas Shields.

PROPOSED ROLLER CLUB FOR WOLVERHAMPTON, WEST BROMWICH AND DISTRICT.

Sir,—It has been thought desirable by several Roller fanciers in the above district that a club, having for its object the advancement of the best of all songsters, the Roller Canary, is very much needed, and would be the means of bringing to the front the breeding and exhibiting of this charming variety. The Roller is a real favourite in the Midlands, and there should be no great difficulty in forming a very strong society, which would make it still more popular. With that object in view, a meeting will be held at the Swan and Peacock, Wolverhampton, on Thursday, April 22nd, at 8 p.m., to consider the question, and all Roller fanciers are given a hearty invitation to be present. If any fancier interested in the matter, and not being able to get to the meeting, would drop me a postcard with any suggestion he may wish to make, the same shall be placed before the meeting. It is hoped a good muster of Roller men will put in an appearance. J. H. Willows.

MY EXPERIENCES WITH AN OUTDOOR AVIARY.

Sir,—You have on several occasions published the experiences of amateurs with outdoor aviaries. Possibly mine, as a novice, may be of some interest. I first put up an aviary in September, 1907, in a sheltered position under a south wall, well protected from the north by a large cedar tree. My first birds were Green Budgerigars, Zebra Finches, Tri-coloured Nuns, and a few Waxbills, Orange-cheeked and Senegal. These proved so attractive that in the following spring I enlarged my quarters, and added a shelter house and a part entirely open to the air. The first winter brought some very severe frosts. Nothing discouraged the Budgerigars, who have bred almost without intermission since I first had them. Frequently the water was frozen solid, but none of the birds seemed to mind it. The young ones, too, thrived well, varying in number from four to seven. I have also had excellent hatches from Cutthroats and Silverbills. The latter, when just out of the nest, are particularly fascinating little creatures, in their neat dove-coloured suits, not a feather out of place. I have now a very mixed collection—Green and Yellow Budgerigars, Pekin Robins, delightful to look at, and most amusing in their quick, alert movements, ever on the look-out for a possible treat in the shape of a mealworm. The cock sings well, very much like a Blackbird. He begins at daybreak. I have three pairs of Canaries. One is now (March 29th) sitting on three eggs, and one appears to have mated with a Green Singing Finch. They are constantly about together, and very busy with nesting material. I shall be curious to see if any result follows. A little Red Avadavat is also busily making a most untidy construction, on the top of a cokernut husk. It is amusing to see the tiny bird strutting about with a long bent of hay, or a feather twice his own length. I suppose there is no likelihood of serious breeding with these birds, however? I have succeeded in keeping one Cordon Bleu hen through the winter, but unfortunately lost the mate just as they were beginning to think of nesting. However, I hope for better luck when I can replace him. All the birds seem most friendly, and as yet have had no trouble at all from the Budgerigars. They are noisy, and delight in flying the whole length of the aviary, in sudden rushes, but I have not found them interfere with any nestlings, though with so many young birds about, constant hatches of Cutthroats, who are as persistent as they themselves, and also young Silverbills and Canaries, they have had abundant opportunity for mischief if so disposed. I only hope this happy state of things may continue. Having a large garden, I am able to find plenty of green food, which is greatly appreciated. The grass, such as is left, when dry, serves for nests for the Weavers, and very pretty nests they make. I should very strongly advise anyone, with time and convenience, to start an out-door aviary for small foreign birds. Mine are greatly admired and enjoyed by all my friends, and get many visitors. We go in and out among the birds, and they take very little notice, allowing me to handle nests or eggs freely, the sitting birds hardly troubling to leave the nest. The Cutthroats simply hang on to one's finger, if one puts it in to feel the delightfully warm nest. They seem to have no thought of fear, and this is one of the great charms of keeping birds thus; I never again want to have a bird in a cage after once seeing them in the semi-liberty and evident happiness which aviary life gives them. Mine is a very simple construction. The wall forms the back; the front is of double wire netting, fine inside, coarse outside, with about 6 inches between, this to make it safe from cats. My own cat is deeply interested in the birds, and evidently thinks it a great mistake that she is only allowed to admire from outside, but they seem thoroughly to understand that they are safe from attack. The roof is boarded, then covered with felt, and corrugated iron over all. One or two trees, or rather large boughs, serve for perching, and frequently for sleeping, while cigar boxes and cokernut husks are largely patronised by some. Last summer, owing to the door being accidentally left open, several birds escaped, among them a brood of young Silverbills, who had left the nest about 10 days. It was amusing to see their anxiety to get back. After a few hours' liberty we found them trying to get through the wire netting. A young Budgerigar got off and went away at a fine pace, and was soon out of sight, but next morning it was at the wires trying to get home, and was easily captured. On the whole, I have had very good luck. Most of the losses have been from newly-purchased birds, probably not sufficiently acclimatised; this, I suppose, is one of the unavoidable risks of bird buying, but the pleasure is worth a little risk. For dainty prettiness I think the various Waxbills quite take the palm, and once acclimatised, they seem to stand an English winter well. Mine were quite untroubled by the severe frost and heavy snow which marked the early part of this month, and now that the Spring once more shows its welcome signs, the whole aviary is a joyful flutter of wings and chorus of song. It is quaint to see the tiny crimson-eared Waxbills devouring mealworms. The effect is comparable to a very small boy trying to smoke a very big cigar, but the mealworm goes down—in time. I often throw down a handful of feathers, and a scramble ensues, and very soon not a feather is to be seen, unless lining a sleeping-place or a nest. In conclusion, for anyone wanting a delightful, not expensive, hobby, I would say, try an outdoor aviary and stock it with some of the small and bright foreigners. A little care daily will be well repaid.

E. M. Burlingham.

YORKSHIRES.

Unbounded Satisfaction

From 106, Crossburn Road, Govan, Glasgow, April 5, 1909.—The Cinnamon cock arrived safe, and again you give me unbounded satisfaction, for which accept my warmest thanks. Please keep me a matched pair of Yorkshires till I make room for them.—W. Leash to L. Dykes.

Finest seen for some time.

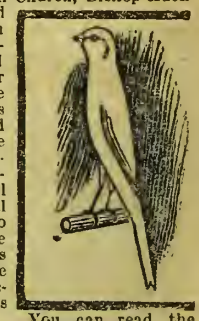
From Hellbeck Street, South Church, Bishop Auckland, April 5, 1909.—I received the Yorkshire safe, and in good health; he started singing as soon as unpacked. I had a very old bird fancier to see him, and he said he is as fine a bird as he has seen for a long time, and just the one to breed some clinking young from. Thanking you for your prompt attention to my wants. I shall always recommend you to all fanciers.—Thos. McDowell to L. Dykes. I could fill a page of "C.B." with testimonials similar to the above, and the scores of repeat orders I receive proves that my birds give absolute satisfaction. You can read the various statements made by certain advertisers who advertise one week as a breeder, then the following week say they reserve none for own use. My Yorkshires are not here to-day and gone to-morrow, as will be seen by the show reports for the past 18 years. And during the present season I have bred and sold more winners than any "so-called" breeder, and am open to deposit a sum of money, to be given to any charity, if I cannot produce more winning testimonials (received during this season). So those who brag about supplying hundreds of winners annually, now have their chance.



I still have some real clinkers left, and those wishing to come to the front, now is the time to get some real bargains. Long, stylish Yorkshire cocks at 6/6, 7/6, 8/6, 10/6, 12/6, 15/-, 20/- each. Hens, feathered like wax, and guaranteed untried, and anxious to nest, at 4/6, 5/6, 6/6, 8/6, 10/6, 12/6. Pairs carefully selected to breed the best at 10/6, 12/6, 15/-, 20/-, 25/-, 30/- per pair. Specially selected Yorkshire songsters at 6/6, 7/6, 8/6, each; all colours in clears, ticked, marked, and clear pink-eyed, and all cold rooms bred and kept; travelling cages, with sufficient food for journey, 3d. extra. Easy payments arranged to suit customers' requirements; state wants; illustrated price list post free; all on seven days' approval, at my risk.

Parrots, Parrots.

Beautiful young selected grey Parrots and new cage, 15/- and 20/- each; rattling Amazons, finger tame, 30/-, 40/- 50/- each; tame lemon-crested Cockatoos, splendid talkers, on stand, 30/-, 40/-, and 50/- each; Ch. talking Military Macaw, on stand, £5; best talking grey living, 4 years old, £5; marvellous talking Mexican Parrot, £4; rosey Cockatoos, 7/- and set Parrot cages, 4/-, 6/-, 10/-, and 12/- each.— William Seward, only address, Menagerie, Hatton Garden, Liverpool.

Now please remember that during the last 18 years I have bred thousands of Budgerigars, and I publicly wager £50 that I have imported, manufactured, sold, and shipped more wired cokernut husk nests for Budgerigar breeding than any other man living; so have any bragging copyists, or so-called shippers sufficient British pluck to accept? If so, step forward; if not, don't brag, but stand down. For 18 years my husks have been uncqualled. Don't be gulled by inexperienced shopkeepers; listen to what experts say:—"Cage Birds" says they are "far superior to the old husks." "Feathered World" says: "Undoubtedly, the new husks are very superior to the old." Again, "Exchange and Mart" says: "Those prepared by Mr. Harper are very superior to the old style, which often fall to pieces at the most critical time, with disastrous results for the nestlings. You had better order the improved form; even if it is a little dearer than the old-fashioned sort, it is cheaper in the long run." "Fur and Feather" tells its correspondents: "They have distinct advantages over the old sort." "Poultry" has said: "For Budgerigars we advise the use of the improved style of husks." Surely these are convincing testimonials.

Don't forget, you have the benefit of 18 years' practical breeding experience. I don't keep a shop; one quality only, the best. My "Improved Secure" husks are 4/6 dozen, smaller quantities 5d. each. Few Cockateel nest boxes 1/6 each. Illustrated pamphlet, entitled "Budgerigar Breeding," free on application.

ALWAYS USE OUR DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

PREPAID ADVERTISEMENTS

UNDISPLAYED.—Three Words a Penny up to eighteen words. One Halfpenny per Word for each word over eighteen. MINIMUM, 12 words, 4d.

IMPORTANT NOTE.—Two or more Advertisements coming from the same advertiser, even if sent in different names, are reckoned together, and, after the first eighteen words, are charged at two words a penny, but no single advertisement, even if accompanied by others, will be charged at less than the minimum price, viz., Fourpence.

Headlines or Footlines 6d., 9d., 1/-, 1/6 according to size.

Postal Orders must be sent as far as possible. All moneys should be made payable to F. CARL.

The Proprietor reserves the right to refuse any advertisement, or to cancel any advertisement ordered for a series, at any time, without assigning any reason for so doing.

THE SHOWS.

HULL C.B.S.

Although rather late in the season, the members' show of pairs for Hybrid and Mule breeding held on April 5th, was very successful, a good number of exhibits being staged, and some grand specimens being noticed. Mr. George Harland judged, and gave every satisfaction. He remarked that with anything like luck, the members should get some good Hybrids and Mules, which should bring Hull to the front in the Hybrid world.

PAIRS FOR CAN. MULE BREEDING: 1, Riley (Goldfinch and Canary); 2, Stamford (Greenfinch and Canary); 3, e, Hogg (3rd Linnet and Canary), vhc, Hope; hc, Hinson. HYB. BREEDING: 1, Hope (Bullfinch and Greenfinch); 2, hc, c, Riley (2nd Greenfinch and Twite); 3, Hogg (Linnet and Bullfinch); vhc, Stamford.—E. R. RIDLEY, Hon. Sec.

CARNARVON.

The second open show, held Easter Monday, when a fine show indeed was made up, considering the lateness of the season. About 170 entries turned up in about 16 classes, which appeared on the whole very satisfactory. Specials were given in every class, and extra specials for best birds in the various sections. It could not be expected that many Canaries would turn up, but Hybrids, British and Foreign Birds were well represented, and some of the very best graced the show benches. There were very few Norwich, but those exhibited were of good type. Yorkshires were more numerous, and some beautiful, typical birds were shown here. A really nice dark Crest won over a fine yellow Belgian after a very hard fight in the A.O.V. Canary class. There was an excellent lot of Canary and British bird Hybrids, and the various winners were of excellent merit. Mr. Longden's well-known fine Cinnamon Greenfinch-Canary took special for best in this section. In the A.O.V. class Mr. Brotherhood won with an excellent Waxwing, which also captured special for best over this section. Mr. Jackson's winning old Goldfinch won special for best Goldfinch exhibited by a North Wales exhibitor. Messrs. Williams and Williams won special for best Canary in show. Altogether the exhibits were shown in the pink of condition. A fine committee of ardent fanciers manage the affairs of the society and its shows, headed by the chairman, Mr. Hope; Mr. G. J. Griffiths, vice-chairman; and the very popular Dan Kelly, treasurer; committee, Messrs. H. Daniels, D. Roberts, J. Hughes, G. Jones, J. Pierce, R. E. Griffith, T. Owen, H. Owen, S. G. Robinson, and J. A. Thompson; with the ever-smiling Mr. J. W. Jones as hon. secretary. The show was held in the institute, which is a very suitable and well-lighted room. All was in working order, and the judging was got through in good time. A great rush was made when the doors were opened to the public, who soon filled the hall and gave prospect of a good gate. Mr. Chas. Houlton judged, and all appeared well pleased with his awards.

PENDLEBURY.

One of the best Lark singing contests was held at headquarters, British Queen, on April 10th, when 26 birds sang. Some of the best Larks in the country were here, from West Houghton, Tynsley, Atherton, etc. Visitors had a full day's pleasure. The first bird was up at 11 o'clock in the morning. Mr. J. Jackson was in command, and kept everything in good order. The winners were as follows:—1st, Beswick, 11 mins. 41 secs.; 2nd, Donnelly, 11 mins. 15½ secs.; 3rd, Smalley, 11 mins. 13½ secs.; Young, 10 mins. 33 secs.; Lee, 10 mins. 12 secs.; Burrows, 10 mins. 4½ secs.; Almon, 9 mins. 12 secs.; Cockshaw, 8 mins. 28 secs.; Wallwork, 8 mins. 23 secs.; Timp, 7 mins. 13 secs.; Hall, 6 mins. 30 secs.; Mills, 4 mins. 23 secs.; Bates, 4 mins. 20 secs.; Williams, 4 mins. 10 secs.; Boardman, 3 mins. 58 secs.; and Knight, 1 min. 4 secs. Timekeeper, Mr. J. Cordwell; judge, Mr. J. Jackson. There were many good birds spoiled by stopping and losing time, and there were plenty which would have put more time in only the owners were asked to take them down when they had no chance. A match, arranged between Mills, Boardman, and Bates on same terms resulted in Mills' bird singing 11 mins. 24 secs; Bates', 10 min. 42 secs.; and Boardman's, 7 mins. 30 secs. It is only fair to state that Bates' bird was spoiled by a fly buzzing round the cage, or he would probably have done the whole time. Timekeeper, Mr. J. Cordwell; judge, Mr. J. Jackson. We propose holding another big event on Whit Saturday.—ALEX. DONNELLY.

UNDER THE WHITE ROSE.

BRADFORD City O.S. had another very interesting discussion on Saturday last. This time the Norwich bird was the subject. Mr. W. A. Cowgill opened the evening in his usual able manner, and answered questions to the satisfaction of all present. Plenty of useful information was brought out, and should prove a good help during the present season.

THE BRADFORD East Society had a good turn-up for their "Pie Supper" on Tuesday evening, close on 40 partaking of the fare, which was provided in celebration of the grand display made by two of their novices in last season's competitions at Yorkshire Union shows, they (Messrs. White and Laycock) finishing at second and fourth place respectively—truly a good record for a society in the first year of its membership.

THE new rule of the Yorkshire Union in regard to the holding of members' shows, is being received with mixed feelings. Of course, for those societies who hold open shows, it is being well received, as many think that it will have a tendency to cause exhibitors to put birds down at open shows where at present they keep them at home for members' shows. What makes the matter worse, is that most societies have arranged their members' fixtures, and issued schedules containing classifications, times of staging, etc., and now this rule upsets the whole lot. A good number of societies, however, have always had this rule, and have never fixed their times of members' shows during the hours a Yorkshire Union Open Show has been in progress. There is a prospect, however, that the scheme will work amicably in the end.

THE Great Horton O.S. had fixed a day's outing for Easter Monday, and, despite the rather bad prospect in the weather, a good few of them made the journey. Their intentions were to visit their birdy friends at Skelmanthorpe, and then jointly roam the moors, intent on "mossing" to lay in a good stock of that commodity for the coming season.

MANY fanciers, however, do not care for moss as a nesting material, but prefer old grass, and only last week I met two well-known fanciers with some big bags full of this stuff, which, when thoroughly washed, appeared to be splendid stuff for the purpose This season has been a grand one to obtain it in good condition, the dry weather of the last few weeks giving fanciers a chance to gather it.

CINNAMON Marked breeders in particular must make a special effort to attend the annual meeting of the C.M.Y.C.C., to be held to-day (Saturday). Much important business is in hand that will require careful attention.

Birds and Human Beings.

A remarkable example of the friendly relations which may grow up between birds and human beings is reported from Endon, a village on the outskirts of the Potteries, where a Robin has taken up residence in the kitchen of a gentleman's house throughout the winter. Early every morning it waits on the wall to be let in, and after it has warmed and fed itself it retires to a plant on the top of a cupboard, from which point of vantage it chirrups its thanks.—A cutting from the "People," sent by George Wainford (age 11), 45, Bengeo Street, Bengeo, Hertford.

*A Wise Parrot.

A man had a Parrot that could say, "There is no doubt of it"; and this was all that she could say. One day he went out to sell Polly. "Who will buy my Parrot?" he said. "Who will give £5 for my Parrot?" "£5," said a man; "£5 is too much for a Parrot." So he said, "Are you worth £5, Poll?" "There is no doubt of it," said the bird, and she looked so wise that the man bought her, and took her home with him. When they got there she did not say a word. "What a goose I was to pay £5 for you," said the man. "There is no doubt of it." said Poll. I think Poll was right.—Extract from "Stories," sent by R. Kemp (age 13), Nineveh, Hayle, Cornwall.

WILD BIRD LIFE.

April Notes.

The bright sunshine during the day is both pleasant and cheering, although the nights are cold and the easterly wind is still with us, so that vegetation and bird-life are only slowly advancing. These conditions we get every spring, and yet we always endure them with impatience. We are so eager to see the hedgerows covered with green, and the tall trees clothed with abundance of rustling leaves. In the bird world there are always a few precocious pairs eager to set up housekeeping. These I think must be mostly young birds of the first nests of last season; but although it is possible to find signs of this early nesting, it is not at all universal. The doings of a pair or two of impatient Blackbirds are not a proof that the whole of the species have commenced operations. While wandering recently through a little-frequented district, we found a few nests in the course of construction. In time these no doubt will contain eggs. Up to the seventh day of the month we have seen no signs of the migrants, although the Wheatear, Chiffchaff, Blackcap, and several others have, in some years, put in an appearance before this. But these same species may be within a few miles of us, and yet perhaps not be seen in our district for some time. Two years ago the Swallows and Martins were hawking about the water meadows within five miles of us, about ten days before they entered the village. The height of our district—some two hundred and fifty feet above sea level—may possibly have something to do with it. Bird music is now fairly plentiful, and for once in a way the mellow flute of the Blackbird predominates over the more cheery notes of the Thrush. Here and there a Chaffinch trills his rollicking refrain, spring-like in its very cheerfulness and enticing one's thoughts to wander to hawthorn-scented hedgerows and waving grasses. It is a bright cheerful little song, somewhat irksome at times, by its frequent repetition, but pleasant to listen to in the clear morning air. Unlike the songs of the other Finches, it is generally rendered from the branches of the higher trees. Out in the open, and along the hedgerows, the Linnet pipes at intervals. Choosing some conspicuous position, with his ruddy tinted breast facing the wind, he sings the sweetest song of all the Finches. At times it is a trifle jerky, but when heard in the open it is soft and pleasing, and has considerable carrying power, for it can be heard at some distance from the performer.

Magpies Feeding Young Ravens.

It is recorded in an old book on birds that a pair of Magpies constantly fed some young Ravens, which had been taken from the nest and placed in an old cart shed.

When Woodcock were Cheap.

There was a time when Woodcocks might be said to be almost as plentiful as Wood Pigeons. They were so abundant that the catching of them was a regular trade, and they were sold for a few pence in the markets.

Owls and Their Young.

Owls are supposed to show an extraordinary attachment to their young, and will continue to feed them long after they are taken from the nest. Young ones which have become tame and familiar, soon revert to their original wildness, if hung out at night where the old birds can visit and feed them.

The Coming Migrants.

All bird lovers should now be on the watch for any strange or unusual birds, for within the next few weeks thousands of feathered creatures will be winging their way northwards. One need not live in the country to note the coming of these welcome visitors. Many of them pass over our great towns and cities, and stay to feed and rest where a few trees or gardens exist. Even London is not exempt, and many of the most delicate Warblers have been noted by keen observers.

The Busy Sparrow.

Wild birds have good appetites, and the old ones are kept pretty busy when feeding the young. A Sparrow has been known to feed its young thirty-six times in an hour, which, given a fourteen-hour day, would represent three thousand five hundred times per week. If this feeding of the young was done entirely with insect food, the Sparrow would be one of our best friends. Undoubtedly during the breeding season green caterpillars and other noxious insects form a considerable portion of their bill of fare.

Nests of Birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

A Few Hints to Intending Competitors.

1.—Always keep a copy of "C.B." in your pocket, and ask all your acquaintances who keep pet cage-birds of any kind: "Have you seen CAGE BIRDS?" If they say: "No," ask them, as a favour to you, to look through the copy in your possession, and then get them to write their full names and addresses in one of the spaces between the "rungs" of your ladder.

2.—Ascertain the names and addresses of all cage-bird keepers in your vicinity; then send each one in turn your copy of CAGE BIRDS, with your compliments, and ask them to attach their signature for their own benefit as well as yours.

3.—You can, if you choose, share the post cards received with the persons signing.

4.—Take your CAGE BIRDS to any shows, meetings, etc., which may be held in your neighbourhood, and there find out anyone whose name and address can be useful to you.

5.—If you are a cyclist take a run round the neighbourhood with your copy of "C.B.," and look up all the keepers of pet birds.

6.—It is not necessary for the persons signing to be exhibitors of birds, or even breeders, but they must be persons who keep cage-birds — it is our object to endeavour to stimulate the interest of all who keep pet birds, and provide them with a fuller insight into the hobby, so that they may take it up in a wider form.

We are holding our open show on December 11th, writes Mr. G. E. Spencer, hon. secretary, Tamworth and Dis. C.B.S., and our Nest Feather Show on July 17th. Mr. Roe is the judge for both. Will secretaries kindly note the dates?

We regret that in our report of the lecture given by Mr. Turrell before the Coventry O.S., the accidental misplacement of a line (the sixth from the bottom) by our printer, should have rendered the meaning at this part somewhat difficult to arrive at.

We have fixed on November 25th (the last Thursday in that month), writes Mr. A. W. Ludlow, hon. secretary of the Stamford and District F.A., for our Annual Open Show if we can get the C.B.U. license for that date. Mr. W. P. Barnes (Grantham), will judge the Canaries and foreign birds, and Mr. S. H. Mays (Wansford) the British birds. We are looking forward to having a good show. We had 166 entries last year, but are sure we should have had more if the first prizes had been 10s. instead of 7s. 6d.

Lovesy, via Stoats Nest to Coulsdon, Surrey, and as bird life should at this time be seen at its best, friends will do well to communicate with me if they wish to be included in the party.

Kindly remind the Roller fanciers in this district, writes Mr. J. H. Willows (Wednesbury), of the meeting to be held on April 22nd, at the Swan and Peacock, Wolverhampton, at 8 p.m., to consider the question of forming a Roller Society for this district. I may say that I have had some very encouraging letters about it, and have not the slightest doubt the club will be formed and will prove a success.

I have been staying at Reading for a few days, writes Mr. F. Wyse of the City and Suburban A.C.B., and you will be pleased to hear that I have found several readers of your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS. We have been very busy birds-nesting, but the birds are much later breeding this year than last. We found several Blackbirds, Thrushes, and Robins, sitting on eggs, one Wren's nest, and one Hedge Sparrow's with eggs in them, and one Tit's nest, and a Starling's nest with young in them.

I have always had a great fancy for bird-breeding, but had no good guide until I came across CAGE BIRDS. It is the only paper I have yet seen out here which is devoted solely to birds. It has become an increasingly interesting paper to me, and I look forward to it every week. Before I began taking in your paper I had lots of trouble and lost many birds through a leg disease, but since taking it I have gained information as to the cure which has helped me much. Allow me also to thank you for the many beautiful plates you have published, and especially for those with the Birthday and Crystal Palace issues, which were grand.—R. MATHIESON (Rhodesia, South Africa).

"RAMSDEN'S SPECIALS."—The demand for "Ramsden's Specials" having become so great, I find it absolutely necessary to devise some scheme to insure these Specials being given where they are most deserved. I therefore propose to keep a record of all orders, and to place each order to the credit of the society of which the purchaser is a member. Members of cage-bird societies are thereforo requested, when sending me their orders, to write after their names the name of the society to which they wish their order credited. Orders received from England that do not bear the name of a society will be credited to the National Crystal Palace Show, and orders received from Scotland that do not bear the name of a society will be credited to the Scottish National Show. Applications for specials should be made to me in September. Each application will be treated strictly on its merits and the granting of a special will depend solely upon the value of the orders standing to the credit of the society making the application. Where customers buy through an agent, the application for a Special must be made to the agent, who will forward the application to me with his report. Ramsden's Pure Peppers for 1909 will be found to be even richer in colour than in 1908, and will as usual be guaranteed "absolutely pure."—J. W. RAMSDEN. (ADVT.)

Our "Popular Bird" Competition.

We hope to be able to announce in the next issue the winner in our recent "Popular Bird" Competition. A large number of readers entered, and the task of analysing the various voting coupons has proved considerably heavier than we anticipated.

Protected Birds in Brecon.

At the last meeting of the Brecon County Council it was moved and carried unanimously that the following birds be added to the list of protected species (all the year round) in the county:—Bittern, Goldfinch, Kingfisher, Barn Owl, Green Woodpecker, Greater Spotted Woodpecker, and Lesser Spotted Woodpeckers.

A Hint.

I have been on the hunt getting the "ladder" filled up, writes Mr. R. T. Campbell, secretary, Dunfermline and Dis. C.B.S., and I hope the effort you are making on behalf of the Fancy will meet with success. Club secretaries who have been "on the hunt" will no doubt have found some new blood, and in all Fancies, we must remember, it is sometimes necessary to introduce blood. New members introduced into the ranks of any club are sure to be profitable. And just wait till the shows are on again, and see what the fresh blood does! I wish CAGE BIRDS and its "Ladder of Progress" scheme every success.

At the show of the Doncaster Agricultural Society, on July 1st, the cage-bird section will be judged by Mr. C. A. House.

I am delighted with CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL. And it contains such a splendid plate of the Linnet.—H. DEACON (Leicester).

I received the CAGE BIRDS ANNUALS alright, and they are excellent. I have only one or two left now.—CHAS. H. NAYLOR, hon. secretary, Hasland, Grassmoor, and Dis. C.B.F.S.

I have received CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL for 1909 and find it more useful than ever for reference, and up to the usual high standard of information given in your publications.—ROBT. WHITTON, secretary, Broughty Ferry C.B.S.

I received my copy of CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL and was delighted with it. It is getting better every year. The two articles on Hybrids and Mule breeding are splendid, and should lead to some champions being brought out in the near future.—W. HORNBY, hon. secretary, Kirkstall and Dis. C.B.S.

A Fine List.

In the course of my Easter rambles, all taken within an hour's rail journey from town, writes "Nemo," I identified the following migrants:—Swallow, House Martin, Sand Martin, Chiffchaff, and Willow Wren (all on Easter Monday, as it happened). I also identified the Kingfisher, Tree Creeper (and nest), Long-tailed Tit, Kestrel, Jay, etc., in all 36 kinds.

Trower's pecials.

We are asked by Messrs. Trower and Co., the well-known seed and food specialists, of London, N., to state that they hope to be in a position very shortly to announce the winners of their special prizes at the last Palace Show. The work of deciding upon those entitled to them has been rendered difficult by the fact that several ties took place, and that in several cases lengthy enquiries have been necessary respecting the qualifications of some of the competitors to enter for them.

Another Lamp Fatality.

I regret to hear, writes "J.E.N." in the "Eastern Evening News" (Norwich), of the misfortune that Mr. W. Snowdon has met with. It appears that a short time since he placed a lamp in his bird-room at night, and not hearing his birds in song the following morning he hastened to his bird-room, and to his dismay discovered that 16 of his valuable birds were dead, and that many others were near "death's door." He had previously disposed of a magnificent Crest to Mr. W. Rudd, the bird specialist, for £10, or his loss would have been much heavier. As it is, he estimates that this fearfully cold night was the means of his being at least £30 out of pocket.

We All Wonder.

In the idyllic village of Port Sunlight (writes a correspondent to the "Manchester Guardian") there have been no more devoted pair than a Peacock and a Peahen, which have been the pride of the villagers for many years. On Tuesday, March 27th, the lady bird met her death in a most unfortunate way. She strayed early in the morning on to the Birkenhead and Chester Railway, and was cut to pieces by a passing train. Throughout the day her mate sought her, wandering about the village crying piteously, and when Wednesday came his dead body was found mutilated on the railway metals at the spot where his mate had met her death. The villagers wonder whether death was by suicide through grief.

The next meeting of the council and the first of the new session was fixed for May 1st, and any society wishing to hold an open first feather show must notify the Union secretary before that date. The following prizes have been offered to the Union:—Mr. F. Carl, proprietor of CAGE BIRDS, prizes for the amateurs of the Yorkshire Union, value £12; Mr. Ramsden, four prizes for birds fed on Ramsden's pure peppers; Mr. H. H. Towers, prizes value £1 11s. 6d. for novice Yorkshire classes; Mr. F. Hammond's prize value £1 1s., for Norwich novice classes. These were all gratefully accepted, and a most hearty vote of thanks was accorded to the respective donors, and the terms as laid down for these prizes were accepted unanimously. Mr. E. W. Johnson proposed, and Messrs. Kent and Clark seconded and supported, a hearty vote of thanks to the retiring officers, Messrs. Greaves and Towers replying. Mr. R. Halliday presented to Mr. S. Dean, the retiring secretary, a gold medal with enamelled centre, and silver cream jug and sugar basin as a memento for the services he had rendered, bringing to a close another year of very successful working of the Yorkshire Union.—SAMUEL DEAN, secretary.

The Lizard Canary and Its General Management.

By J. HAMPSHIRE.

A Lecture delivered before the North Manchester C.B.S. on March 23rd.

The North Manchoster C.B.S. held a very successful meeting on March 23rd, in Christ Church Schools, Harpurhey, Manchester, when Mr. Hampshire, that much-respected Lizard fancier, of Oldham, gave a lecture on his experience as a Lizard Canary fancier. The Prosident of the society, Mr. Balshaw, occupied the chair.

Having been asked, said the lecturer, for my experiences with the Lizard, and the general management of the bird-room, I will gladly comply with the request. At the same time, I regret my inability to do full justice to the subject, and I would much rather some of our older fanciers had undertaken the task. However, it is more to the younger fanciers that I wish to give my advice. I hope, therefore, that if there is anything which other fanciers do not entirely agree with, they will not be too harsh in their criticism.

Concerning the Birdroom.

First of all, we will deal with the bird-room. I may say that my room is one that gets the full benefit of the sun, and I generally get very fair breeding results. But experience has taught me to fix something over the window, say, one third down during the summer months, so that the room is to some extent shielded from the heat, for when it is fully exposed to the glare of the sun, no matter how much ventilation there is, you cannot keep your room at what I call a normal temperature. By the above method, and by fixing a piece of wood under the bottom rail of the lower sash of your window, say, three inches deep (the length to be full width of bottom rail), and also by pulling the top sash down, say, one inch—by doing these things you will find that you will have fresh air coming in from the middle of the window, the foul air going out at the top. So you see I get plenty of fresh air in the room without having a draught on my birds.

I will now give you a little information as regards my cages; at the same time I wish you to understand, that the Lizard-Canary is a bird which should be kept in a separate cage if possible during moult, and also during the show season, as by having two or more birds in one cage your birds are liable to pluck each other.

In the first place, I would recommend you to have your cages made in a uniform order, that is, all of similar pattern, and accurate in sizes. Some fanciers prefer double breeders, but for myself I prefer a single cage about 16 inches wido, by 14½ inches high. I find these very suitable for breeding or moulting purposes. Of course, if you require a larger cage, you might have one or two made on the three-compartment principle, to correspond with three of the others when hung on the wall; for when the slides are drawn these cages come in very handy as flights during the winter months for the stock birds. I do not use the ordinary cage rack, as there are too many corners about it, which are no good to you if you should chance to be troubled with red mite. I have what is termed a hookrail; that is, a piece of wood which is plugged to the wall, and runs the full length of the room. I fix these so as to leave an air-space of half-inch between each cage.

When to Commence Operations.

About the middle of March I start the "cleaning down," by beginning the white-washing of the room, also all the breeding cages. I am a great believer in lime white-wash; any cages that want the fronts re-polishing, now is the time to do it. Before replacing the cages I generally take a piece of rag and rub a little turpentine over them, as this is a great preventative of red mite.

I generally pair up at the beginning of April; that is providing the birds, of course, are in good condition. Your cock birds should be in full song, the hens moving from perch to perch, flapping their wings, which is a sign that they are in a forward condition. These are the birds you can make a start with. But until you see these signs, by all means keep them separated, or you will be disappointed in the results. It may seem rather hard to hear that Mr. So-and-so has got a lot of hens down, and another person has got, perhaps, eight or nine young ones, and you begin to think that you are a long way behind. But be advised by me, and have patience for a little, and you will be well rewarded before the breeding season is over.

I usually start to give my birds egg-food about the middle of March—one teaspoonful to each bird every other day. My egg-food is made as follows: I get two eggs which have been boiled (for about sixteen minutes), and when they are cold, I add a thick slice of loaf bread, a dessert-spoonful of granulated sugar, and a spoonful of maw seed, also a pinch of salt. I also use hemp, rape and inga seed, besides the best Turkish Canary, and dandelion or watercress, as green food. I may say that inga seed prevents the hens to a great extent from becoming egg-bound.

The Type That is Wanted.

When pairing birds with the object of breeding youngsters suitable for the show bench, think well of the standard you are aiming at. The following is the description of the Lizard Canary.

Lizards, like all other Canaries, are of two varieties, viz., yellows and buffs, jonques or silvers, or gold and silver spangled. These are divided into four classes, viz., golden-spangled clear cap, silver-spangled clear cap, golden-spangled broken cap, and silver-spangled broken cap. The cap of a Lizard should be oval in shape, extending from the beak to the base of the skull. There should be no dark feathers on the top of the beak, and the cap should cut off clean over the eyes, leaving a fine dark line at the sides of the head, called the eye-lash. The skull should be wide and proportionately long, rather flat than otherwise on the top. The ground colour of a gold Lizard is a golden bronze of a soft neutral tint. The Silver Lizard is of a warm silver grey in colour. It is customary to colour-feed Lizards for the show bench. This considerably alters the colour of the birds, giving them a much warmer tint, the gold turning into something of a chestnut colour, and the cap into a deep orange-red. Colour-feeding enriches the Silvor Lizard very much, giving the bird a soft warm shade. This is most distinct on the head. The effect on the body is a soft velvety grey, and the softer and more velvety the shade of ground colour appears, the better the bird is considered. A green tinge in the ground colour of a Lizard is a serious blemish. A broken cap or miss-capped Lizard is one that has dark feathers on the head, other than the fine lines over the eye forming the eye-lash. A bird whose cap runs down below the base of the skull is called over-capped.

The spangling on a bird should commence well up in the neck, increasing in size to the wing coverts. Each row of spangles should be separate and distinct, perfectly lineable down the back. On the sides of the bird the rows of spangling should commence with the lacing on the butts, increasing in size to the central row down the back. The wings and tail feathers should bo black, and the outer edges fringed with gold or silver as the case may be. The wings should meet at the tips. The size and shape are of importance. The breast should be round, full and wide, and the back broad and full. The lacing feathers on the wing butts should be of nice size, clear, and distinct, lying regular. The covert feathers on the wings should be the same, and the outer edges clearly defined. The work on the breast, sometimes called rowing or lacing, should be soft in colour and lineable. The beak, legs, and feet, should be dark.

| | Points |
|---|---|
| Cap for size and regularity | 10 |
| Ground colour | 15 |
| Eye-lash | 5 |
| Spangle, for size, quantity, and regularity | 30 |
| Wings and tail | 10 |
| Size | 5 |
| Lacing and covert feathers on wings, for size and regularity | 5 |
| Breast for rowing or lacing | 10 |
| Beak, legs, and feet, for darkness | 5 |
| Total | 100 |

A Point to Remember.

You must bear in mind that what the cock bird is deficient in, as regards show points, you should try to balance by means of the hen. In mating up, you should put gold to silver and silver to gold. Some one may say, cannot we put two silvers together, so as to gain size, or two golds together to get more colour? I have tried both ways, but was not very successful. You lose size with the golds this way, and the silvers come too rough in feather and very cloudy in spangle. Still, you may gain a little in size. But even then you have to study the best way of pairing them back again the following season.

I should advise you to adopt the ordinary method of mating, which is, gold to silver, and silver to gold; and also try to keep the size up by using the largest birds for breeding with, for after all, "Like produces like." I usually pair a clear capped bird to a broken cap. You might then have a long-capped bird. If such be the case, it is wisdom to pair it to a very heavy broken-cap, or even to a non-cap. This is a bird that I admire, for as a rule, you will find that non-caps have the best of spangles. It is a bird which is devoid of cap.

During the Breeding Season.

I usually run one cock bird with two hens, and have had very fair results. He should be put in with the hen that seems to be in the best condition. Keep him with her until she has laid her third egg, and then let him have two or three days in a cage by himself, before transferring him to the other hen. I mostly take the eggs away and then replace them on the night when the third eggs has been laid. By doing this you get the young hatched as nearly as possible at one time, in which case the young all have an equal chance of being fed. I only give the hen plain seed when she is sitting, but on the night before the eggs are due to hatch, I place in the cage a little egg-food in readiness for feeding.

You may perchance have a hen that is a bad feeder, for there are some that will not feed, no matter how you try to coax them into doing so. When a case of this sort arises you should transfer the young to other nests of young of about the same age, if you havo any. There is a lot of difference in feeding by hens. Some will take a lot of egg-food, some hemp or rape seed, while others will feed mostly off dandelion, or watercress, etc. I may say that I try them with scalded rape, and if they will feed off dandelion, I let them have as much of it as possible during the time they are feeding the young. I find that young ones brought up on dandelion seem to grow a deal quicker than on anything else. But much depends on the parents. Sometimes a hen will fall off feeding through the heat; in this case give her a little Epsom salts in the water.

This is a thorough and practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, written by a well-known expert and judge. It contains chapters dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, and an illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman, reproduced in the finest art style. There are also exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge approached by no other book of its kind at the price.

Successful Hybrid Breeding.

By THOMAS JOHNSON.

In this article my intention is to deal chiefly with Hybrid breeding between British birds. Hybrid breeding has come to be recognised as the most uncertain and the most disappointing branch of the cage-bird hobby. Yet, to my mind, it is the most fascinating of them all.

Often have we read in CAGE BIRDS of a disheartened fancier telling of his experiences. He tells of the time he spent getting the birds into condition, how he gathered wild seeds, how he watched the hen lay, only to be robbed of the eggs owing to either the Goldie or the hen Bullie, as the case might be, having a liking for new laid eggs. At last he manages to get one of them hatched. He is then overjoyed. He is sure to get one reared now. But he hasn't reckoned with the hen Canary, who is only just beginning to enter into his calculations, and he finds at the end of a week that she doesn't come up to the scratch. And there's the rub. Everything depends upon the hen Canary. But why should it? I shall try to give my experiences on the point.

A Record of Over Twenty Hybrids.

I think I can lay claim to having bred as many Hybrids from British birds as any fancier in the country during the last couple of years. I have fully reared (I don't say hatched, although to get them hatched is almost as good to me, as I rarely lose any), twenty-one Hybrids during the time stated. This number includes Goldfinch-Greenfinch, Twite-Greenie, Linnet-Greenie, Siskin-Greenie, Siskin-Linnet, Redpoll-Twite, and Greenie-Bullie Hybrids. The Bullie Hybrids have with me been the worst to get, for reasons which I will show later.

I have only had one large aviary, measuring about 18ft. long, 6ft. high, and 6ft. wide. I had five hen Greenies, two cock Goldies, and one cock Siskin in this aviary.

I had another 6ft. long, 4ft. high, and 4ft. wide, but of course it was not large enough, as I found out. I had in it four hen Bullies, one cock Siskin, one cock Goldie, one cock Greenie, and one cock Linnet. The four hen Bullies, as soon as the breeding time came round, never did anything but fight, so I took two of them out. The other two wouldn't have anything to do with the cocks, although, mind you, they were in breeding condition. They actually paired one to the other, and went through the necessary formalities to a successful marriage, to all appearances. The little cock Siskin I had with them was an accommodating little chap with regard to his wives, but whenever he made an advance, he was compelled to retreat, or have some of his ardour damped.

Learning by Experience.

This would not do, I thought; something would have to be done if I was to get any Bullie Hybrids. Meanwhile, the others were going on all right. After many hours' thought and worry, I decided to let them remain as they were for the season. I managed to get one fertile egg from them, which I was fortunate enough to rear. It is a cock Greenie-Bullie, and has been out four times to exhibitions, and was each time in the money. I learned one thing last year, and that was that hen Bullies should not be put together in an aviary if you want fertile eggs.

A friend of mine was served in the same way with a couple. They paired together, built a nest, and laid in it, both birds sitting together on the nest. One egg was fertile, which proves that copulation with some bird or the other took place. The egg hatched, and the young one was duly reared, but was unfortunately very much disfigured in the legs, owing, no doubt, to the weight of both hens being continually on the nest. It proved to be a Linnet-Bullie, and I put it out of its misery.

At the time of writing I am going on a different track altogether. I have altered and enlarged my aviaries, having got four now, running back to back. They each measure about 14ft. long, 6ft. high, and 6ft. wide. I know that it is not every fancier who is able to find room for so many aviaries in his garden. I am going to mention what I intend doing, and I leave it to my readers themselves to decide whether or not my method is worth working on; but I cannot see how any one can hope for success from the attempt to breed in cages.

The Secret of Successful Rearing.

In the first place don't bother with hen Canaries. I know I am treading on somewhat dangerous ground, but I will show that hen Canaries are of no use to the Hybrid breeder when the breeding is carried on on a somewhat large scale. In fact, I don't know that they are not a nuisance. They are certainly never to be relied on.

The secret of rearing Hybrids successfully is, "hen Greenfinches and natural food." You can rely on a hen Greenie. She is worth any three good hen Canaries. I don't say this is so in a cage, though; I have never tried one thus, although I think that a hand-reared Greenie would prove her worth even in a cage. In fact, I have even used the hen Greenie as a foster mother for Canaries, rearing both young Greenies and young Norwich Canaries in the same nest.

Last year I had a hen Greenfinch which laid five eggs, and all of them fertile. Of course they were Hybrids of some sort. I thought that if all of them hatched they might prove too many for the Greenie; so I put two of the eggs under a hen Canary. The young ones under the Greenie were out four days before the other two (I mean out of the nest) and were much larger birds. The two birds entrusted to the Canary were very small in comparison, although the Canary seemed to do her best with them. I think that the Greenie would have reared the lot, which all goes to show that the hen Greenfinch is a better feeder from a Hybrid breeder's point of view. Anyhow, I would like to hear of someone trying it.

Plans for the Year.

I will now just give the varieties of birds I am stocking our avaries with. In the first aviary I shall put three hen Greenfinches, two cock Greenfinches, and one hen Bullfinch. This aviary I am intending to use as a "feeder." Any eggs I get from the Bullies will be put under these hens and duly brought up, while the hen Bullies go on laying again. In No. 2 aviary I shall put one hen Bullie, one hen Greenie, one hen Siskin, one hen Linnet, two Siberian cock Goldies, and one Sib-bred cock Canary (Norwich type). The third aviary will contain one hen Bullie, one hen Greenie, two hen Siberian Goldies, one cock Siskin, one cock Mealy Redpoll, and one Sib cock Canary, and the No. 4 aviary will contain two hen Bullies, one hen Siskin, one hen Mealy Redpoll, one cock Greenie, one Siberian cock Goldie, and one monster yellow green cock Canary, Norwich type.

You will notice that I am risking two hen Bullies in the last aviary, but I am a little doubtful as to the result. If they don't behave in a proper manner, out one of them will come. You will notice I haven't classified the Bramblefinch-Chaffinch cross. Are they worth it? How many of the Hybrids that were bred from this pair in, I think it was the season of 1905, are on the show bench to-day? I think none. In fact, I have only heard of one this past season. Considering the beauty of the parents, in my humble opinion, the Bramble-Chaffio Hybrid is insignificant, and is very disappointing. But that is only one reason. Both the birds in question are very quarrelsome and troublesome at breeding time, though quiet enough at any other time of the year. At the breeding time I have always found them to turn out nasty and spiteful, and I have invariably had to cage them off. Lately I have excluded them altogether from the aviaries. The same remark applies to the cock or hen Mules that one sometimes puts in the aviary out of the way; they generally get in the way at breeding time.

Which Are the Best Birds?

With regard to the sort of birds required for the breeding of Hybrids, undoubtedly you must get the largest and best-coloured birds possible. As to which makes the best breeder, the English Goldie or Siberian, I haven't used the English, and so cannot express an opinion. I do know, however, that directly a female is put in an aviary containing two Siberian cocks, they start to fight like bantam cocks. So I think the Siberians are good enough. I should also prefer the Siberian hen Bullies, but they are difficult to get. Certainly, the best shaped birds, in addition to the best coloured specimens, are the finest for Hybrid breeding. If you do rear one it is sure to be a good one then.

The aviaries must be stocked with evergreens of some sort before the breeding operations commence. Nothing beats branches from fir trees (Pinus austriaca); in fact, any variety of conifer answers the purpose well. For nesting sites, nothing beats the little German wicker cages, with the fronts taken out of them, and the water vessel also, but they must be wrapped round with evergreens.

With regard to the fancier who attempts to breed in cages; well, he deserves all the success he gets. It's an uphill fight. I do insist on steadiness in this case. For cage breeding the birds must be absolutely steady; whereas, for aviary breeding, steadiness is not an essential to success. Wild-caught birds will breed in an aviary, but the cage-breeding fancier must have hen Canaries for feeders, and he has to make the best of them accordingly. The larger the cage that is used the better the result is likely to be, and a good look-out must be kept for the eggs.

Concerning Light Mule Breeding.

One word about light Mule breeding. Almost all fanciers are of opinion that light Mules can only be bred from Canaries that are and have been for a considerable number of years inbred. The writer himself holds that opinion. There are a few (only a few) cranks, rightly so-called, who are believers in sight influence, and again, some there are who believe that light Mules are just merely sports. But I take it that the greater majority of fanciers believe in inbreeding.

The orthodox way, of course, is a Finch cock bird and a hen Canary. But if light Mules can be bred successfully from a cock Finch and a Sib hen, why shouldn't they come from a Sib cock and a hen Finch? Don't all Canary breeders say that the cock has more influence in colour than the hen? If that is so, why should not more light Mules be bred from the Sib cock and Finch hen? The foregoing paragraph may be a little bit theoretical, but it is my own personal opinion, and that is precisely why I have advised the putting of Sib cocks in the aviary along with the hen Finches.

On Feeding the Pairs.

With regard to feeding. If the birds are all flying together in the winter months, they will give much less trouble to feed, and be otherwise looked after. An unlimited supply of hemp seed and sunflower seed should be given through the winter, in addition to a little mixed seed. Personally, I am very fond of the packet seeds that are advertised in CAGE BIRDS, as they contain lots of varieties of wild seeds that the birds are fond of. The birds very much enjoy picking out the different varieties. Then, any wild seeds that have been stored for winter use will be acceptable. Green food need not be given much in the winter; in fact, there is not much one can give them. An apple cut in two and strung up will do for them to nibble at; also a piece of cuttle-fish.

During the breeding time, however, the birds will want more attention paid to them with regard to their diet. As soon as any youngsters make an appearance, let the first feed, if possible, be greenfly. It is rather a difficult matter to get them, but if anyone lives in the neighbourhood where Sycamore trees grow, an examination will reveal millions of small green flies on the under side of the leaves. I myself am rather fortunate in that respect, as a large tree overhangs the aviary. A plentiful supply of freshly gathered wild seeds must also be given. Dandelion heads are greatly relished; and supply shepherds' purse, groundsel, chickweed, while later on give milk-thistle, sow-thistle, sorrel, dock, hardheads, and goats' beard (which must not be confused with dandelion, as it is very similar, and quite as much appreciated). In fact, any wild seeds that are growing may with safety be brought along. The birds themselves will do the sorting out, and any that they don't want they will refuse.

Egg-food is generally treated with contempt by Finch hens; therefore it is a waste of time and money to make it. In fourteen days to the day the youngsters will be out of the nest; then is the time to compare them with Canary-reared ones. The difference is very marked—on the right side though.

When about a month old the young Hybrids will be ready for caging off, preparatory to colour-feeding, and steadying. I should not advise exhibiting a young bird, as such would stand but a rare chance against the older birds, not being up in size and colour like them. They will be much better if run over another year.

Do not let mice get troublesome in an aviary; they are apt to eat any eggs they may come across, and the blame may go put on to Master Goldie. The best thing I have found for clearing them out is the advertised Virus. I have tried other things but they have not answered quite as well as this. When once the mice are cleared out, you are safe for at least 18 months or two years, and then surely another 1s. 6d. will not "break" you? It is much cheaper in the long run than either poison or traps, and gives much more satisfaction.

One word about the Sib cocks. The Sib cocks may be kept in cages all the winter, and a round of Sibs taken from them during April, as it will be useless putting them in the aviary till the beginning of May. They rarely begin breeding until May is well on.

In conclusion, I would like to point out that all work done in the aviary during the breeding time must be carried out quietly and quickly. Don't be always inside bothering them. Get the feeding done and come out again as soon as possible, and don't interfere with the birds. I have had hen Finches that would not be moved from the nest even by a stick, but they are the exceptions. Hen Bullies are particularly nervous, and often forsake their eggs if disturbed. I conclude wishing all Hybrid breeders more success in the future, and am hoping to see some large classes for Mules and Hybrids next year.

The Pairing & Rearing of Yorkshire Canaries

By TOM BENTLEY.

A Lecture delivered before the Dewsbury O.F.S. on April 3rd.

On April 3rd, at the headquarters of the Dewsbury O.F.S., Mr. Tom Bentley, of Cleckheaton, a noted breeder and exhibitor of Yorkshire Canaries, delivered an informing lecture on "The Pairing and Rearing of Yorkshire birds." Mr. Kershaw, president of the Society, of Birstall, occupied the chair, and there was a large and interested audience. The lecturer was heartily thanked for his able discourse.

Prior to Pairing Up.

After a brief introduction—this being the first occasion on which Mr. Bentley had appeared in the role of lecturer—he said:—About a month before I pair up I give my cages a good cleansing, afterwards whitening them out with a good sanitary water paint. Having done this, I sprinkle insect powder on the top of the cages, and then I get one pound of carbon and place it all over the room, as in warm weather, however many times cages may be cleaned, they are liable to smell a little. The carbon takes the smell off. I also wash all my birds before I pair them up—as they must feel better for it—and I also clip the birds' claws and beaks, the idea being that they will not prick the eggs when they are sitting.

Now about the nest pots, which have an important bearing on rearing. I have used both tin and pot ones, but I prefer the latter, as they have broader rims. I also think they are much better for the hen to grip when she is feeding her young.

I use felt linings, and hemp for the birds to build with, first tearing this up into very short pieces. I have my perches level with the rim of the nest, as these keep the nest from rocking about. I place the hens into the cage that they are going to breed in a week before I pair them, in order to give them a chance of getting used to their new quarters. I also supply them with an abundance of gritty sand and cuttlefish bone.

The Birds to be Paired.

I like a good level pair of birds for breeding with. They should be well drawn out, with good head, nice round back, and long wings. The cock bird should be well filled in the neck, and the quality of hen I like to see is one of good breed, and nerve, and feather. About three weeks before I pair them, I give them a bit of good keep, viz., an egg about twice a week, mixed seed, and if I can procure it, a bit of dandelion. This is a fine thing for bringing the birds into condition. When I am looking for dandelion, I always lift the old plant up and endeavour to find it nice and green and sheltered from the frost.

Now that I have got the birds into good condition, I pair them up, and then expect to see some eggs in a week's time. When the hen has laid her third egg I set her off sitting, and if the eggs are full they will hatch on the thirteenth or fourteenth day. I always place plenty of insect powder in the nest.

I might say that I leave the cocks with the hens during the first round, but during the second round, I put them in with the hens, morning, noon, and night, and I find they are both ready before I get the cage door shut. Then I take the male birds out and give them a bit of egg-food. I think the cock bird is then more vigorous than if left entirely with the hen. I have hatched five and six with this method of procedure.

The Time for Pairing.

I consider the third week in March is a nice time to pair the birds up. If the weather is mild, and the birds are ready, this allows plenty of time for getting three rounds before the birds start to moult. Before pairing up, every fancier—and all, no doubt, are anxious to be successful—should see that his birds are well nourished and healthy, as it is a waste of time to attempt to breed with sickly birds. In short, you cannot expect to get healthy stock from ailing birds.

Many fanciers leave the cock with the hen all the time she is sitting and feeding her young. I don't like this way, as I am of opinion that this practice makes the hen idle. She remains on the nest, and always wants the cock to feed her. In such a case they are bound to sweat the young ones.

On the occurrence of such an instance, I recommend the placing of a cork in the middle of the nest with a screw, and then the hen cannot get so close as would otherwise be the case.

During the sitting process I give the birds white Spanish seed, and if the weather happens to be a bit cold I occasionally dispense them a bit of hemp seed. I generally place the cock in with the hen when the young birds are a fortnight old.

When the young birds are hatched I give the hen egg-food, crushed hemp seed, and soaked Spanish seed. I have seen cases where birds would not feed on egg stuffs, but the soaked Spanish seed and German summer rape have had the effect of setting up an appetite. I give my birds egg-food three times a day, and when the young are three days old I give dandelion or a little bit of young lettuce.

When the birds come out on the nest pot edge, I take them right away, as my experience has satisfied me that they start picking sooner than they would by leaving them in the nest for a longer period. In the latter case they are apt to get plucked and are thus spoiled to exhibit in their first feather. I have taken them away when they have only been eighteen days old, and they have gone on picking all right.

Concluding Remarks.

When I take the young ones from the nest I nourish them with egg cake, and egg and bread mixed up together, and moistened with milk. I don't give them any water at all until they are five weeks old, as a few years ago I was unfortunate in losing a lot of young birds. The conclusion I then came to was that they were drinking too much water, and this, to my mind, brought on inflammation. When my birds are so affected, I apply gently a piece of flannel damped with turpentine to the lower part of the body. I had a few birds suffering in this way last summer—they started going in the corner at the bottom of the cage. I put them into separate cages, took their water and seed off, and gave them nothing but boiled German summer rape and milk sop. They would then be about seven weeks old, and they soon recovered.

I give the young birds the bath when they get nicely on picking, and I entirely avoid putting sand in the cage bottom. I always think they eat too much of this, and in my opinion it does them no good. I replace sand with oat husks, and so the birds are kept cleaner, and this is a decided advantage for fanciers who require to show their birds in the first feather.

I think that when fanciers are buying birds, it is advisable to get them off a good-feeding strain, because the progeny are almost certain to be good feeders. When you have some of your young birds which have started plucking, it is a capital thing to scald some quassia chips and put some of the liquid into the bath or otherwise spray the birds with it. The bitterness of the preparation you will find a sure preventative of plucking.

Two years ago I bred 103 birds with eleven hens, and last year I bred 93 with ten hens. I will give you my recipe for egg cake:—One pound flour, one cupful of sugar, piece of lard size of an egg; two tablespoonfuls of baking powder, and six eggs, baked in a slow oven.

The Colour-feeding of Birds.

By J. W. RAMSDEN.

A Lecture delivered before the London and Provincial O.S. on March 18th.

Colour for Colour's Own Sake.

To those who desire to merely improve the colour of their birds, and not to colour-feed for show purposes, a simple method is to make or get made a sponge cake or other suitable cake, in which has been mixed some tasteless pepper. A small piece of this coloured cake can be grated and given daily, but you will not obtain such good results from this as from the fresh-made egg food. To obviate tailing and flighting, birds intended for first-feather shows should be colour-fed from the nest. The same mixture as I have described should be given, and I have always found my breeding hens feed well on it.

Towards the end of the moult, give your birds a little iron as a tonic and as iron feeds the blood with its colouring matter, it fixes the colour on the plumage. As colouring matter deposited by vegetable substances fades more or less it is important that something should be used to fix the colour, and I believe the best agent to be either sulphate or citrate of iron. The daily dose must be a small one. Sulphate or citrate of iron can be given in the drinking water, say about ten grains to the quart.

I quote the following from a well-known medical work:—"Iron enters into the composition of the living body in considerable quantity. Especially is it present in the red blood corpuscles, into whose colouring matter it enters. When, from whatever cause this proportion is deficient, or the colouring-matter itself is not present in sufficient quantity, ill-health, accompanied by pallor, is seen to follow, and although it is by no means clear that the giving of iron internally alters this directly, it certainly does indirectly—it favours nutrition and the formation of more healthy blood, bringing back strength, colour, and bodily vigour. Iron acts as a tonic directly on the blood, and indirectly on other tisues." Recently the "Lancet" had said that the difference between eggs with light and dark yolks was due to nothing but the amount of iron the egg contained. An egg from a fowl kept in a London back-yard always had a light yolk, but a fowl running about the highways picked up a large quantity of iron, and that coloured the egg.

Concluding Hints.

It sometimes happens that a bird will get what we term "stuck in its moult." In such cases, place the bird in a warm place, and add a little hot cayenne food to its food; this will generally restart the moult. No green food should be given through the moulting season to birds that are being colour-fed, as the feed is somewhat relaxing. In those rare cases where it is found to be too relaxing, add a little rice flour to the feed.

There is one other point I must mention, and that is the trouble sometimes experienced in weaning birds from the colour-food. I have had much trouble in this respect, especially with Cinnamons. I found that a good plan was to place some mixed seed on top of the colour-food, and gradually reduce the amount of colour-food until the bird was being fed on seed only. Those who wish to keep their birds fully charged with colour, I would advise to give a small amount of colour-food once a week right through the show season. Be careful to remove all stale food daily, as nothing will turn a bird from the egg-pan quicker than stale or "fusty" egg food.

Trouble and Expense Considered.

We now have to consider trouble and expense, versus what?—perhaps a premier position on the show bench, for colour tells, no matter what is said to the contrary. Also interest caused to outsiders by the beautiful colour of the Canaries staged to-day. In my capacity as manager of the Crystal Palace Cage Bird Show, I am often hearing remarks such as "Oh what a lovely colour!" And I am sure that many of the fanciers of to-day were first attracted by the colour of the birds they saw on the benches of some show or the other. At one of the Palace shows, several Norwich Canaries were sold to go to Turkey, and sold on account of their colour alone. "I want the hottest fed birds in the show," said the buyer to me. "Price is no consideration, and other points I care nothing for. I want colour." £7 was offered for a Norwich, a blazo of colour. If this bird had been non-fed, his outside value was 20s., so colour-feeding paid, in this instance, at any rate.

We have to admit, also, that we are to a great extent, the slaves of fashion. While one exhibitor feeds, we all have to, or else take a back seat. We have non-fed classes, it is true, or, as some schedules announce, "natural colour classes," but what a fraud most of them are! I know my subject, and I know that many winners of these classes were fed—not on red pepper but on yellow pepper and yellow colouring foods, and what is the use of hiding the fact? Often and often have I received letters from fanciers begging for a hint as to how to feed yellows for non-fed or natural colour classes. Mr. T. Heath once remarked: "At the time he was showing colour-fed birds they were divided at all shows into 'cayenne' and 'non-cayenne' classes. That, however, made no difference. All the birds that won prizes in the non-cayenne classes were really fed on cayenne."

Dr. Boulthee told me that in Canada they had no sympathy with colour-feeding, and had brought forward the argument that it was no good debarring it, because one could never tell when he had got it or not. Past masters would undertake to feed a bird to any colour, and people who would not colour-feed had to compete with those who did, and who at the same time produced just the bird wanted for natural colour.

The Discussion.

At the close of the lecture many questions were put to the lecturer and were ably answered by him, chief amongst them being: Do you think sugar is good to mix with colour food?—Yes, in small quantities. It makes the feed more palatable to the birds. Too much sugar would be likely to cause length of feather, which is not wanted, especially in Yorkshires.

What benefit is there in using a pepper containing a full proportion of oil?—Oil imparts a sheen to the plumage. In non-colour fed birds fanciers use linseed, which is a very oily seed, to obtain this sheen.

How long should colour-feed be mixed before being given to the birds?—One hour is quite long enough.

Is old pepper good for colour-feeding?—Old pepper, if it has been properly kept, will colour well, but fresh ground new pods will colour better.

Why do some birds colour better than others?—In most cases because they have more natural colour in them; in other cases because some birds feed better than others.

How can we tell if a pepper needs oil added to it?—By the sense of touch. Feel it: if perfectly dry, oil can be added with advantage.

Are the lighter coloured peppers brighter in appearance and more likely to produce a brighter colour than the dark peppers?—Up to a certain point, yes; but the finest quality dark peppers are bright and will give the best results. The dark peppers of a dull brick-red colour are ground from second-quality pods, probably kiln-dried.

What part of the world produces the finest coloured pepper?—Spain, because of the climate and soil, the latter being rich in iron. The pods can be sun-dried in Spain, which is a great advantage.

How it is that some pods, although rich in colour, when ground produce a light coloured pepper?—Probably because the seeds, which are of a light colour, have been ground with the pods. Remove the seeds before grinding, and the colour of the pepper will be improved 50 per cent.

Can we colour-feed without using the usual egg-food mixture?—Yes. Some birds eat the pepper in its raw state readily. Or you can use the raw or dried pods by placing them in a basin with sugar and covering them with boiling water. Let them stand 12 hours, and they will become plump like a ripe tomato, and the birds will eat them greedily.

Can you colour-feed any colour?—Possibly. Easily, if you had a strain of white birds. I have tried to produce a blue Canary by colour-feeding, but produced a bluish tinted, slate-coloured bird.

Can "Liverpool Greens" be improved in colour by colour-feeding on a vegetable green extract?—Yes, I believe so.

Can a colour that might almost look like a stain be deposited on a bird's plumage by colour-feeding and be impossible of removal by the ordinary tests used by judges?—Yes. You can feed a bird on any vegetable colour you like. That colour will be absorbed into the bird's blood, and during the moult that colour will be produced in some shade or other on the bird's plumage. It is impossible to say what colour will be produced, for we only know what red will do. I believe it possible to produce almost any colour by colour-feeding, but I want birds with little or no natural colour to experiment on.

You stated that in Missouri some 50 varieties of capsicums had been grown and reported on. Are some varieties more suitable for bird feeding than others?—Yes. Some varieties of the capsicum are coarse and acrid, whilst others equal a dessert fruit. The secret of a colour-food vendor's success is in the finding of the latter species of capsicum, and then getting them cultivated in a country where both the soil and climate are suitable. Common capsicums can be bought at 4d. per lb., whilst the rich-coloured garden capsicums have fetched as much as 1s. 10d. per lb.

THE GOLDFINCH AND THE LINNET.

By BARKER CLEGG.

Notes of a lecture delivered before the Pendleton and Salford O.S. on March 22.

At the meeting held on March 22nd, Mr. Geo. W. Lythgoe, the president, occupied the chair. In introducing the lecturer, Mr. Barker Clegg, the chairman said that he would not occupy much of their time in so doing, as Mr. Clegg was well known as an authority on both Canaries and British birds. Mr. Barker Clegg, on rising to give his promised lecture on the Goldfinch and the Linnet, was received with much applause. He said that it gave him pleasure to accept the invitation of the general secretary, Mr. H. Clayton, to address them on the subject he had before him. I have been intimately connected with your Society, he said, for many years, and I have previously had the pleasure of addressing you on the subject of British birds, etc. On this occasion I have to deal with two species, yet both of one family—the family Fringillidæ or Finches. Both are resident or partly migratory, and principally seed eaters. They are birds which are much sought after as cage pets.

The Goldfinch Described.

With your permission, therefore, I will first take the principal characteristics of the Goldfinch. This beautiful Finch is known locally as the Goldwing, the Goldspink, the Goldie (Scotch), the Proud Tailor (Notts.), etc. Length, 5.2ins. Description of colours:—Above, chocolate brown; greater wing coverts, golden yellow; quills, black, tipped with white; base of primaries, golden yellow; crown of head and a band behind the ear coverts, black; forehead, crimson; bill, rosy white; feet, fleshy brown; cheeks and neck, white; and chestnut markings and finishings.

The sexes are alike in plumage. Nest, cup-shaped, beautifully made of moss and lichens, and lined with horsehair, feathers, etc., the heads of dandelion and coltsfoot, situated in an orchard or about one. The young are fed on dandelion, chickweed and groundsel seeds, and insects. The species seldom rear more than two broods. The winter feed of the Goldfinch consists of the seeds of the thistle, dandelion, knapweed, hard heads, and a host of other seeds, and insects found about the fruit trees. So that a fancier, making a speciality of keeping them, must secure a good supply of these seeds for his stock.

The end of October, or the beginning of November, just when the frosts have nipped the ground and the seeds, is the best time for procuring your stock. Keep old birds separately caged.

Greypates may be kept in a flight cage or an aviary. Feed them on dandelion, thistle, crushed hemp, teazle, and a little inga. A few tufts of thistle and dandelion and dock thrown on the bottom of the cage, and one old bird put with the Greypates are often very advisable. The old birds you must give a variety, such as a mixture of equal parts of thistle, dandelion, hemp, Canary, inga, and teazle, with apple and marigold, and occasionally a little linseed. Once or twice a week give a little egg-food, and a few oats with your sand at the bottom of the cage. The cage for keeping a Finch in should be about 14ins. long, 7ins. deep, and 12ins. high, with a bar across and two perches. The wires must have no traps for claws, or you will find your birds hanging, and will consequently lose them.

Selection for Exhibition Purposes.

For shape twenty points are allowed. A bird of nice proportions, in shape similar to a small Norwich Canary, standing at an angle of 45 degrees on the perch.

Head and blaze twenty points. Head, nice entrance, large in keeping with the body; good width (not snipy), the black sound and dense, falling from the base of the skull as far as the bottom of the neck; the blaze should be broad, and as rich as possible in colour, large, well back over the eye, and well down the throat, show a nice clear finishing, free from black stripes.

Wings, 15 points. Bars, well seen, clear and bright, and buttons well defined.

Body, 10 points. The colours to be clear and pure; nice even markings on the breast; and the tanning evenly dispersed. Tail, showing three white buttons on the centre of tips.

For showing, Goldfinches must be steady and their colours bright and glossy; they must be lively and active, with a graceful attitude (not sleepy-looking, or dull). To attain to good manners in your bird, you must train your Finch. Spend plenty of time with him. If the plumage gets soiled it is advisable to wash him; do this the same as you would a Canary, using a little glycerine, which adds much to the beauty of the contrast of the colours and shows the white up to perfection, as well as the richness of the tanning. It also tightens up the tail, and the foldings of the wings. Goldfinches may be shown for years. Two or three years is their best time, as a rule, but I have known Finches to win at six years old and in good company.

So leaving the Goldfinch for the time, I must quote the words of the poet:—

The groundsel's feathered seed, and twit and twit;
And then in bower of apple blossom perched,
Trim his gay suit, and pay us with a song.

The Linnet "Family."

This "family" seems to puzzle the amateur bird lover; even country people. We frequenly hear mention of the Brown, the Grey, the Rose, or Red Linnet, the Greater Redpoll, and the Common Linnet, as if they were all birds of different species. Such is not correct. The Linnet is a bird which varies its plumage considerably at different seasons of the year, and even some of our old ornithologists class them as different species. They must be classified as follows:—Linota cannabina, the Brown or Common Linnet; Linota canescens, the Mealy Redpoll; Linota linaria, minor, the Lesser Redpoll; Linota montium, the Twite or Mountain Linnet; Linota holboelli, Holboell's Redpoll, which is similar to the Mealy, but larger, and has much larger bill. There are two specimens of the last mentioned in the British Museum, in the Gould collection.

The Brown or Common Linnet is the greatest favourite, and soon settles down in confinement. Head, ashy brown, dusky in the middle, the forehead more or less tinged with crimson; back, chestnut brown, sides faded; tail feathers, nearly black, edged towards to tip with a greyish tinge, the outer ones bordered with white; wing primaries, black, the first five with very narrow, and the next five with broad white edges, showing ¾in. in white, the rest tinged with red and tipped with grey; breast: dull crimson or brown, and at times almost a stone colour (the latter are considered the best to moult out as show birds); abdomen, dull white; beak, brownish horn colour.

In summer the plumage is changed. The beak changes to a bluish lead colour, the head becomes more brown, tipped with crimson, the back more uniform and bright chestnut, and the breast crimson; feet and toes brown. Length 5.02 inches.

The Mealy Redpoll closely resembles the Lesser Redpoll. It is only a winter visitor from the northern districts, and associates with our Lesser Redpoll. A section of this family inhabits Greenland, and these birds are much larger, having bigger bills and coarser stripes on the under surface. They are very often seen in competition at the shows.

The Lesser Redpoll is a smaller bird than the Mealy Redpoll, and much more rufous brown in colour, with only very little white. The bill is yellow with a blackish tip, and the crown of head in summer is deep crimson. These birds are very similar in their habits to the Siskins.

Holboell's Redpoll.—The specimens in our British Museum were caught in Norwich in January, 1831, and were the property of Mr. John Gould. We have no records of other birds exhibiting the same giant properties and length of bill.

The Twite or Mountain Linnet is a northern species, and may be distinguished from the Brown Linnet, by its dusky yellow bill. Back, brown above, streaked with blackish centres to the feathers; no red cap on the head; breast and abdomen dull white; rump, rosey; no red on breast; and feet blackish. The Twite resembles the Linnet very much in habits, except in its mode of nesting. It is longer in the leg, and in the tail.

The range of Linnets outside Britain is larger than that of the Goldfinch. They are also found in Scandinavia, the Shetland Isles, Greenland, Northern Africa, the Canary Islands, and Madeira. In the migratory season the birds from the Continent have a decidedly brighter and richer plumage than our resident birds.

Selection of Birds for Exhibition.

If you are selecting birds for exhibition from young ones, pick out those having good, bold heads, with plenty of size, and do not forget that these birds show at their best until they are two, three, or even more years old. Soaked summer rape and plantain are required for young birds. For stock food supply a mixture of Canary, summer rape, winter rape, teazle, inga, and linseed, with tit-bits of charlock, plantain, thistle, and dandelion—and dandelion and shepherd's purse when procurable. Cages should be of similar size to that for the Goldfinch, with perches not more than 4 inches apart. A wash before your birds are shown is very effective in steadying, points for which amount to 20 in Brown Linnets, 25 in the case of Twites, 10 in the case of Goldfinches and Redpolls.

The Brown Linnet is much sought after for his song. Many Linnet singing contests are arranged for in Lancashire and Yorkshire, and plenty of rivalry exists amongst the fanciers as to which are the best quality birds. No doubt you have read about the whinnying and spinking proclivities of certain birds in the columns of CAGE BIRDS. One thing I must say, and that is that anyone once having heard a really good Linnet sing will never forget it. For variety of tricky music, with mellow tones of sweetness, it is simply charming.

Several questions were asked, to all of which Mr. Clegg replied in a most satisfactory manner. The Chairman, before closing the meeting, said he was sure they were all satisfied at having heard such a splendid lecture.

BIRD FOOD SPECIALISTS.

Telephone No. - - - - 12353 CENTRAL.

April 15th, 1909

Dear Sir,

Fanciers have had many foods placed before them as substitutes for the home-made egg food, such as yellow biscuit meal, and foods containing an infinitesimal percentage of egg (possibly none at all) or yolk of egg, a bad smelling, insoluble, indigestible substance, more often than not manufactured from bad eggs, and naturally they have been discarded with disgust by practical and thinking Fanciers, and the old method reverted to.

What has been wanted is a food with a guaranteed percentage of fresh eggs, showing the same nutriment as when in the raw state, also the absence of colouring matter as a guarantee of purity. We give all these guarantees, and have satisfied the leading Fanciers that what has been badly wanted is now procurable.

We guarantee our "EGG & BISCUIT" to contain 50% of actual egg, and advise you to send for a sample 6d., or 1/- tin at once; postage paid, 7½d. and 1/3.

Yours faithfully,
FOX BROS. & CO.

Managing Partner.

P.S. Young birds in all parts of the country are doing marvellously well on our "Egg and Biscuit". No risk or trouble. Ask your Corn Merchants for it, and refuse substitutes for Egg Food, of which there are many.

HOSPITAL EGG WEEK.

A Scheme Which Should Appeal to All Keepers of Poultry.

Our flourishing and progressive contemporary the "Poultry World," is carrying into effect a scheme which will, we venture to think, appeal to all the keepers of poultry throughout Great Britain, and we have no hesitation in bringing it before the notice of whatever readers of CAGE BIRDS may be possessed of laying fowls. In short, it is suggested that for one week in May every poultry keeper who is charitably inclined should send to the "Poultry World" offices, 154, Fleet Street, London, carefully packed and carriage paid,

One Dozen New Laid Eggs.

These eggs to be apportioned and distributed to the various hospitals. The Editor of our contemporary proposes enlisting the sympathies of all poultry-keepers in the plan, and to appeal to each and every owner of laying fowls in Great Britain to send in during the third week in May next one dozen new-laid eggs at least, and as many more as they can spare, carefully packed and carriage paid. He has been in touch with authorities on hospital administration, and learns that the scheme will be thoroughly acceptable, and that the "Poultry World" will have the benefit of expert advice and assistance in the allocation and distribution of the eggs received to the various hospitals.

Readers of CAGE BIRDS who possess fowls, and who may be inclined to lend their kindly co-operation in bringing this plan to a successful issue, should remember that

The eggs are not wanted to be sent before May 17th next, and that

All eggs should be new-laid and carefully packed.

All packages should be addressed

F. CARL,
Managing Director "POULTRY WORLD," 154, Fleet Street,
London, E.C.

with the words "Hospital Eggs" in the left-hand top corner.

The packages will be sent direct to the hospitals without being opened. Covering letters should be sent separately.

Remember that every dozen eggs will help. And the more dozens the better. Bear the dates in mind:—

May 17th to May 22nd.

Ask your fowl-keeping neighbours if they are going to send any eggs for the "Poultry World"

A METHOD OF FIXING PERCHES.
Sent by J. Worsley, 22, Margaret Street, Northampton.

I do not remember having seen the following method of fixing perches illustrated in your columns. I find it most suitable, and especially for breeding cages, for it is so easy to take the perches out to clean, yet they remain very firm when in positon. Take an ordinary cotton reel, and saw down the dotted lines AA, as shown in the sketch. Nail, or screw, to the cage back, and fix the perch end inside the hole.—J. WORSLEY.

A METHOD OF MAKING HEAD-HOLES.
Sent by Joseph Marshall, 65, Nelson Street, St. Peter Street, Hackney Rd., N.E.

I am sending a rough sketch of a simple method of making round head-holes. Get a round piece of wood, ¾in. in diameter. Make a hole with a bradawl ¼in. deep, as shown in the sketch. Place one end of wire in this hole, and bend it round the wood till it meets. Then take out of the wood, and the natural spring of the wire makes a circle about 1in. in diameter, as seen in Fig. 2. Cut off the piece of wire inside the circle, and bend the long piece to the required angle with pliers; solder together, and it is complete. By the way, mine are made on the handle of my biscuit crusher.—J. MARSHALL.

CANARY QUERIES.

Footsore Before Laying.

D. Bird.—I would first suggest as a solution of this trouble that a careful examination be made of the nest and the nest pan for any insect pests that may be there, and also see the nature of the nesting material, as it is just possible that this may be the cause of the sore-footedness of the hens. Do you sprinkle the nests with anything at all to keep down insects? If so, what is it? Assuming that there exists no external cause of this kind, and that the cage floors are kept quite clean and well sanded with gritty sand that is not too coarse and gritty, I would advise you to try the effect of twenty drops of gin and a small pinch of Epsom salts in the water every second day whilst the nest is being built, and until the eggs are laid. Add also a small spray of groundsel daily to the green food supply. I shall be pleased to hear the result of the next round. If the birds still refuse to sit when thus treated, and the nesting material is comfortable and pure, you can do nothing but place the eggs under a foster parent for them to hatch and rear.

Is it the Seed?

No Name.—Of the three samples of seed which you send, No. 1 is far the best, and is a very fine sample all round. No. 2 is sweet and clean, and of good flavour, but is very small, and a very poor sample in comparison with No. 1. No. 3, though sweet and clean, is very small and thin, and the worst of the three. There is not the slightest fear of No. 1 sample harming your birds, so there must be something wrong with your management. Give the birds an unlimited supply of Canary seed as a staple diet. Every second day allow about half a teaspoonful of summer rape for each bird, and give separately. Twice a week give about half that quantity of hemp seed, and once a week allow half a teaspoonful of egg food for each bird. Give a little green food daily. Under this regimen your birds should thrive well. You will find it neeessary to discontinue several seeds you are now using in order to adhere to the above dietary.

A Bad Case.

Bert.—You give so few particulars of the symptoms that the only thing that is quite certain about your bird is that she is in a very serious condition. Your feeding is wrong for a sitting hen, so although on first sight it looks like a bad case of egg-binding, there is the probability that it is bowel trouble, caused by improper feeding. Should the hen be still living give her two drops of a mixture of equal parts of brandy and best salad oil in the beak morning and night for two days, and in the drinking water give twenty drops of whiskey, and six each of glycerine, and syrup of buckthorn for a day or two. Feed on a diet of plain Canary seed, with a little summer rape every second day, and a pinch of inga twice a week. Give a little chickweed as green food daily. Stop all the other foods you have been giving, and adhere to the above simple diet for two or three weeks. It would be best to separate the hen from the cock for a fortnight or thereabouts.

Diarrhœa and Moulting.

C. Shewan.—Am inclined to suspect the purity of the food or water, especially the rape, which you say the hen systematically rejects. The fluctuations of the kitchen, and probably draughts, have also probably added to the trouble. Therefore, first attend to these points. See that draughts and great fluctuations are avoided as much as possible; keep cages quite clean; and use box pattern ones in preference to open wire cages. If there is any doubt about the water supply, boil it before use. (1) Feed the hen on a staple of plain Canary only, and twice a week give half a teaspoonful of summer rape, separately (see that you get the genuine article). Every second day give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it. Give no green food, nor fruit of any kind, unless it is a bit of banana occasionally. Limit the diet solely to this for a fortnight at least. Do not give baths until the bird is better and takes to them voluntarily. In the drinking water give six drops of dandelion juice, and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence daily for three days. After this give six drops of dandelion juice, and as much carbonate of bismuth as will cover a sixpence every second day until the diarrhœa ceases. If it does not cease in a few days add to the last-named mixture two drops of tincture of opium once or twice. On the alternate days whilst giving the last medicine, give two drops each of tincture of gentian and tincture of steel, continuing this for a week or fortnight, as might seem necessary. (2) Feed the cock on plain Canary as a staple, and every second day give half a teaspoonful of summer rape. Twice a week give a few grains of hemp, and on two other days half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with two drops of port wine, and one of cod liver oil emulsion in it. Give a small leaf of daudelion daily as green food. Dissolve a pennyworth of citrate of iron and quinine in two tablespoonfuls of port wine, and give twenty drops of this mixture in the water two days in every three until the moultiug is stopped. Do not mate the bird until the moulting has quite ceased.

Canary Querists should send to our publisher for "Canary Breeding for Beginners," 7d.; "House's Canary Manual," 1/2; and "Yorkshire Canaries," 1/-, post free.

Chronic Asthma.

Constant Reader.—Your surmise as to the bird's hanging in the window being the cause is undoubtedly correct. I fear the case is too bad for you to be able to do much good. However, try the following for a few weeks. Keep it in a comfortable place, not necessarily overheated, where the temperature varies as little as possible, and see it is perfectly free from draughts. A box cage hanging on a wall is much to be preferred to an open one. Feed on the ordinary diet frequently advised here, and in the drinking water give twenty drops of whiskey, six each of oxymel of squills and tincture of lobelia, and two of oil of eucalyptus well shaken together, two days in every three for a week, every second day for another week, and omit it during the third week. Then begin at the beginning and give it again for a fortnight longer. After two or three courses the bird should show a decided improvement if it is going to be improved.

Stopped Singing.

C.E.M.—Am afraid the cock was not in very high condition when you put him in the breeder, unless you have placed it in a new position where the bird may have got a chill since his change of quarters. You do not say how much nor how often you give the egg-food. Feed as recommended in the book you mention, but give half a teaspoonful of egg-food only every other day and mix a pinch of gold of pleasure seed amongst it each time, and ou the alternate days give a very few grains each of inga and hemp. Every day give two leaves of dandelion as green food. In the drinking water for a day or two give six drops of dandelion juice and two each of tincture of steel and tincture of gentian. Under this treatment the bird ought soon to pick up and be seen calling the hen and feeding her through the wires. It would be little use your letting them run together until the cock is fit.

Too Vigorous Wooing.

Try, Try Again.—You have perhaps been a little too liberal with stimulating food, which would not only increase the heat of its passion, but also to a certain extent be responsible for the irregularity in the hen's laying. The harrying attentions of the male would also largely contribute to the accidents to the eggs and the premature deposition of the second on the same day as the first. You should reduce the quantity of egg-food and mixed seeds by about one-third; give a little extra green food, but no dandelion, and mate them again in about a fortnight after the separation. The answers to your tabulated queries are: (1) Mate again in a fortnight; not in seven days. (2) After mating them again allow the cock to run with the hen from breakfast time until about six p.m. each day. Shut him off with the slide each night, and remove eggs each morning as laid before returning him. (3) When the hen is less worried by the cock, as she will be under the above management, she may lay in the nest of her own accord. If she does not you can do absolutely nothing to compel her to do so. (4) No, the egg you have saved from the last clutch will be no good at all to add to the next one. It will be too stale to be of any use for hatching even now.

When? What?

P.M.B., Beginner.—(1) It depends solely upon the health and condition of the bird as to when a cock hatched last June should come into breeding condition. Under normal conditions any healthy birds of that age should now be quite forward in breeding condition. Many cocks cease singing when mated up, so if the one you mention seems healthy and feeds the hen there is no reason why the result should not be successful, even though he does not sing. Give the mixed seed only every second day, and on the alternate days a small teaspoonful, not more, of egg-food with a few grains of gold of pleasure seed amongst it. Also add a leaf of dandelion to the supply of green food each day. A pinch of Epsom salts in the water for one or two days might do good. (2) The same remarks as in No. 1 apply to hens coming in breeding condition. As regards the most suitable green food, opinions differ. I prefer chickweed, groundsel, lettuce, or watercress, in the order named. Dandelion, I consider, should only be used in the early part of the season, and for backward birds. Certainly it must not be soaked. If wet when gathered, it should be rinsed and wiped dry in a towel before giving to the birds.

Just Short of Success.

Meteor.—There must be a screw loose in your method of feeding or management for your stock to be so healthy, and hatch so many young, and yet not rear one beyond the sixteenth day. I note you make no mention of green food, and you speak of giving a tablespoonful of hemp and Canary seed as though you limited the supply of Canary. Perhaps the solution of the mystery lies here. When your next young are hatched, adhere strictly to the following system, and if it does not prove quite successful write again, and say just where and how it fails. On the thirteenth day of incubation give a very small quantity of egg-food—about half a teaspoonful between the pair. On the fourteenth day, if you hear the young are out, give about the same quantity of pure yolk of egg, freshly boiled. Next day give the same allowance. The third day after hatching give a small teaspoonful of egg-food, consisting of about equal parts of egg yolk and crushed sponge cake, or stale bread crumbs, or powdered biscuit, whichever you use. Give this each day for the next two or three days, and on the fourth day add a small piece of green food—either chickweed, watercress, groundsel, or lettuce. Gradually increase the supply of green food and egg-food daily to meet the increasing demands of the young, but always give it in small quantities and fresh several times a day rather than a large quantity at once. When the young are about a week old use egg yolk, crushed sponge cake, and bread crumbs or biscuit powder in equal parts for soft food, and begin to give a teaspoonful of slightly cracked hemp each day, and increase this slowly to double or treble the quantity as the young grow, and according to their number. When they are a fortnight old you may add a little soaked rape daily, or increase the amount of dry rape in the seed hoppers to a third part of the bulk. Some hens will be found to feed better when a little soaked rape is given; others do not care for it. Of course, you must continue giving the usual seed diet of Canary and about a fourth part of rape in the seed hoppers all the time from the day of hatching. These items are all to be given in addition to the ordinary seed diet, and not as a substitute for it. If you follow up this system I think you will get the young reared quite safely.

Loss of Plumage.

B.L.—If the hen had been healthy and in good condition the mere fact of laying two eggs in one day would not have caused the loss of feathers, so I fear she must be thoroughly out of order. Examine her and the cage and nest for red-mites or other insect pests, and if any are found thoroughly eradicate them, and matters may right themselves. But if none are found, separate her from cock, keep in good large cage, feed on a staple of two parts Canary to one part summer rape, give half a teaspoonful of egg-food twice a week, and on two other days a small teaspoonful of a mixture of one part each small oats, hemp, and split groats, and a half part each of linseed, maw, inga, and gold of pleasure. Give green food freely; a little each day, and in the drinking water six drops of dandelion juice and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence three or four times a week for a few weeks. If she recovers her plumage and condition quickly you may mate her up for a late brood at the end of the season.

Strain of Rollers.

W.T.H.—You could certainly lay the foundation of a strain with a cock and two hens, as you suggest, but you would want to introduce another cock, and perhaps another hen or two next season to avoid too close inbreeding. Then, with steady, patient toil in breeding and training the birds, you might be able to say you have a strain of your own making in perhaps ten years hence. Pray do not imagine that a genuine strain is built up in a year or two as easily as shelling peas. It means much patient toil, and constant close application and study for years to do it. You should get a nice moderate type of singer for 10s., but nothing at all exceptional in the contest line. The usual type of breeding cage—20 in. by 11 in. by 14 or 16 in. high—is quite suitable for breeding these birds. Dealers send the birds in tiny wooden travelling cages, which serve the purpose excellently. The carriage of a bird over the distance you name would probably be sixpence. An enquiry at your railway station parcels clerk's office would settle the matter definitely.

Owing to the Easter Holidays many queries have necessarily had to wait an answer until our next issue.—EDITOR.

Bird Fever.

W. J. Slater.—Am sorry to tell you there is no really practical remedy, if by this you mean a cure, for bird fever. The only remedy lies in prevention. Once the fever is established, there is practically no cure. Rigid disinfection, isolation of all apparently healthy birds, and a good wholesome diet of pure food, without egg-food, are the best means of helping the birds to win the battle. Feed on a mixture of two parts Canary to one of summer rape, with a small pinch of a mixture of equal parts of hemp, inga, and linseed every second day, and on the alternate days a little crushed plain biscuit, given dry, and a pinch of maw seed mixed with it. Give a little green food daily. Keep cages scrupulously clean, the floors covered with pine sawdust, and burn immediately all the refuse from them. Also keep seed and water vessels scrupulously clean, and boil the latter frequently for a few minutes. Give fresh pure water twice a day, and if birds are weak add thirty drops of brandy. Do not introduce any fresh birds for some time, and if your cage appliances and aviary cannot be thoroughly disinfected it would be wiser to burn them and get new ones as soon as the birds have quite recovered—if they do recover. You must remember that the disease is terribly infectious, and that the iufection is very persistent. You should get Dr. Clarke's monograph on "Septic Fever," 7d., from this office. It tells you all that is worth knowing about the complaint.

Brevities.

Not Egg-Bound (Mrs. A. Sinkins).—No, I do not think there are any signs whatever of the hen being egg-bound. The way she has of sitting on the nest a few moments and then coming off is quite a usual thing with a great number of hens just before laying. The probability is that if you did not interfere with her she has laid her complement of eggs by the time this can appear. By the way never attempt to treat a hen for egg-binding as long as she seems bright and in good health when she comes off the nest. When egg-binding really occurs the symptoms of pain and distress are much too pronounced to be disregarded even by a casual observer. In a very short time the hen appears to be getting quite in extremis, so there never need be any mistaking the malady.

Yorkshire Cock Ailing (P. J. Kavanagh).—It is probable the bird caught a chill on the journey, or perhaps it has been accustomed to a warmer room than yours, and has consequently taken cold. Feed as usually advised here, but give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of sherry and one drop of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it every second day for a week or so. Give a mealworm a day if you have them for a time, and two small leaves of dandelion each day. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whiskey, ten of oxymel of squills, and two of eucalyptus oil (well shaken together), two days in every three until better. If he gets well and active you may breed him, but not otherwise, unless you wish to perpetuate the trouble. Many thanks for good wishes.

Always Moulting (J.R.).—Feed on a staple of two parts Canary to one summer rape. Twice a week give separately half a teaspoontul of hemp, and give the same quantity of crushed sponge cake with two drops of sherry and one of cod liver emulsion well mixed in it every second day for a fortnight. A mealworm each day for a time would also do good. Give a little green food daily. In the drinking water give six drops of dandelion juice and a pinch of Epsom salts for a day or two. Then get a pennyworth of citrate of iron and quinine, dissolve it in two tablespoonfuls of port wine, and give twenty drops of this in the water every second day until feathers cease dropping.

Young Birds Dying (Jules).—Your birds died from constipation; of that I have not the slightest doubt. From what you say about the parents feeding them, you would also, in all probability, have successfully raised a brood of fine birds had you used more discretion in the feeding. When you saw the old birds feeding so freely with egg-food you ought to have begun to give a little green food on the third day, and, in any case, you should begin with it on the fourth day. This would have prevented the constipation which the egg and biscuit food is apt to give rise to, and have saved the lives of the birds. See reply to "Meteor" for full details of rearing, and act on these lines when the next brood is hatched. You may go on using the egg-food you mention, but add about a third part of the bulk of crushed sponge cake to it. This will make it less constipating; also remember to give green food.

Some Eye Trouble (Constant Reader of CAGE BIRDS).—You do not give enough particulars to enable me to form a very definite opinion, and it would be impossible to say whether the room was the cause of the trouble without full particulars as to its situation, environment, lighting, etc. You do not even say how you feed the bird. Assuming you feed on the ordinary diet frequently given here, you may try the effect of the following treatment. Keep cages and perches scrupulously clean, see there is no possibility of draughts blowing into the cage, and bathe the eyes once a day with a lukewarm solution of boracic acid—a small teaspoonful of acid to a teacupful of warm water. Dry gently, and then put on a piece of spermaceti ointment plus two grains of red oxide of mercury to the quarter ounce about the size of a pin's head. Hold the bird whilst the ointment melts and runs into the eye. A chemist will mix you the ointment, which is poisonous, so use it carefully.

Hen's Behaviour (A.E.E.).—Am inclined to think the panting and peculiar noise you say the hen has begun to make all day long after being in good condition and building her nest promptly after being mated are nothing more serious than urgent loving appeals to her mate. Unless she appears really ill in some more tangible way I do not advise you to interfere with her; neither do I think you need worry at all about her. See she is quite free from draughts and chills. If the peculiar noise should continue after the hen has gone to roost at night you may give her, for a few days, the medicine advised to "Constant Reader" for chronic asthma. By the bye, does the cock sing or court her much? If not, I should doubt his being a genuine one.

Sings Less (E.C.).—It is quite likely the frequent changes the bird has had just lately are throwing it into moult. Leave it in the room where it now is; do not give much egg-food, and not more than twice a week. A small half teaspoonful will be quite sufficient. Continue to give the medicine for the cold until the symptoms have quite all disappeared, but use it only every second day, and on the alternate days give twenty drops of port wine, in two tablespoonfuls of which you have previously dissolved a pennyworth of citrate of iron and quinine. Continue this for a fortnight, or, if the bird has begun to drop feathers, until the loss of feathers is checked. Occasionally omit one or other of the medicines, and give a pinch of Epsom salts for one day. Give a little chickweed or daudelion daily. Drop both medicines as soon as the respective needs for them has disappeared.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Goldfinch with Crest Hen.

Ernest.—You can certainly mate a Crest with a Goldfinch if your fancy leads you that way. It is not at all uncommon to see Mules with crests, or, rather, a little top-knot of feathers. No doubt you would get one or two so adorned as the result of your mating. They have no particular value, but are somethiug of a curiosity, because fanciers do not use Crests for Mule breeding purposes as a general rule. A "Crest" is no help to a Mule on the show bench, I should say rather the coutrary in fact, though I well remember one with a really good headpiece gaining recognition from the judge at the Crystal Palace show. With regard to the person you mention, we are not permitted, and rightly so, to recommend (or the contrary) any particular advertiser or advertisers through these columns. You should join some society in your district; you will find a directory to them given in "Cage Birds Annual," a work every beginner should possess. Then you would soon make some birdy friends.

About Mule Breeding.

A.W.—You can safely follow the advice given by the writers of the articles on Mule and Hybrid Breeding which have appeared in our columns during the last six weeks or so; all were written by practical, experienced men. With hen-Canaries paired to cock Finches, the procedure is practically the same in all essential details of feeding and management as when two Canaries are paired together, therefore such a book as "Canary Breeding for Beginners" (price 7d. from CAGE BIRDS office) is a great help to all those making a commencement in Mule breeding, as it deals with nesting, egg-food making, feeding the young, and with any little difficulties which may crop up. I rely upon egg and biscuit myself as the main food for hens rearing young. There are substitutes on the market which claim to be equally successful, and far less troublesome to prepare (if that worries you) and you could certainly try them. Eggs, of course, have to be boiled fresh daily, though it is possible to keep an unused half of an egg for a day if it is buried in crushed biscuit and stored in a dry, cold place. I may say, however, that I place an equal value upon ripe chickweed and shepherd's purse as helps in the rearing of young, especially when full of seed; in fact, I have reared young on these alone—strong, lusty birds, too—with, of course, the usual seeds. I have no objection to any greenfood, so long as it is young (tender) and fresh; I use lettuce, watercress, and rape seedlings. Dandelion I do not care to give to young birds, for that it has a pronounced effect on the internal economy of birds cannot be gainsaid; I like it for the old birds at the beginning of the season, when being got "into condition." Seeding groundsel tops I use, too, but not the leaves. Always avoid old, tough, stringy leaves of any kind. A Norwich hen makes a fine mate for a cock Goldie. Yes; get a young bird, and cold-room bred. We are not allowed to recommend any particular advertiser.

An Outdoor Birdroom.

Mule Breeder.—The place of which you send a sketch needs very little alteration; it seems a very promising building for keeping birds in. I presume, of course, it is quite weather and draught proof, a most important point. The window facing north-east needs to be thoroughly taut and snug, to resist entrance of the "draughts" that frequently come from that quarter of the compass; and the same remark applies to the door. I should certainly put a window in the end facing south-east, as this would let in the early rays of the sun, and the early light of dawn, a very valuable point. I should not cover the windows if a fair height off the ground, though a strip of thin curtain over the lower panes of glass would look very neat, if artistically arranged. The cages I should arrange on the walls facing south-east and north-east; if you build any flights, or have large flight-cages, put these to face the north-east. I should think that one extra window, if of fair size, would be ample; you are the best judge, however.

British Bird Querists should purchase our "British Bird Manual," published in two parts, "Hard-bills" and "Softbills," price 1/- each, or in cloth cover together, 2/3 post free.

Seed Mixture for Aviary.

George.—I often explain that it is wasteful, consequently expensive, to use a seed mixture in a large aviary containing many species of birds. The best method is to give the principal seeds (say canary, teazle, hemp, summer rape, charlock, and sunflower, or, preferably, a mixture of half-sunflower and half safflower) in separate hoppers or dishes, and throw a little of the other seeds in occasionally, by way of a change, or as "tit-bits," as fanciers say. If you must have your seed-mixture, then for a varied collection of Finches, such as you name, you will find it difficult to beat this: Canary and teazle three pints each, hemp two pints, summer rape and charlock one pint each, linseed half-a-pint, with about a half-pint of mixed sunflower and safflower seeds, increasing or decreasing the quantity of these latter according to whether the birds eat it all up or not—it depends on the composition of the collection, as some birds like these seeds more than others. The other seeds—niger, maw, wild seeds, wild seed mixture, etc.—you can give now and again, as indicated above. The exact quantity of hemp should vary according to the season (less in summer than in winter). A little more linseed is also useful during the moult.

Concerning a Chaffinch.

Eve.—Some Chaffinches are very bad to get steady, and possibly your bird may not become really tame until after he is moulted, especially as you contemplate turning him out into a big cage with a hen Canary. Talk to him when you go near, and endeavour to gain his confidence; offer a mealworm frequently direct from your fingers. The cage should be a good depth from front to back; the length is not so important. The feeding I have frequently dealt with in this column. As a staple seed mixture give the following; Canary and teazle four parts each, summer rape, charlock and linseed one part each. In addition, give a good feed of white sunflower seen or safflower seed daily; or put one part amongst the stock mixture. Smashed walnuts (and other nuts) are greatly relished also, and should be given occasionally in the light of a special treat. As the bird is backward, a small teaspoonful of hemp might be given every day. Give a mealworm or two every day, varying same with flies, smooth caterpillars, gruhs, earwigs, spiders, aphides, gentles, wasp grubs, etc., as obtainable. Chaffinches will eat most kinds of live food. These birds are not particularly keen on green food, but will nibble with appreciation a sprig of shepherd's purse, chickweed, groundsel, dandelion, etc. Radish, turnip, and summer rape seedlings, are usually eagerly devoured, however, when just sprouting, which they soon begin to do when soaked in cold water.

In an Aviary.

Mixed Aviary.—Really you have such a hopeless mixture in your place that I find it difficult, nay, quite impossible, to advise you what to remove to give you a chance of breeding something. Yours is a fine, spacious place, that is one good thing, and so you may do better in it than a first glance down your "contents bill" leads one to think. I hope you will. Still, you have the sexes of the different species so very out of proportion—for instance, four cock Chaffinches and one hen (that spells murder, I should imagine!), one cock Bullfinch and six hens, twelve cock Greenfinches and seven hens; and so on almost right through the list. Then your lots of Wood and Shore Larks are apparently unknown quantities, so far as sex goes. With the sexes so unequal, it is difficult to see how you can avoid squabbling and interference; and if you equalise them, then your aviary will prove much too small—another aviary would be needed, further, if you cast out all unmated birds. I hardly see what you can do now except "change your luck" by letting things take their course, and hope for the best. Pity, if you desire breeding results, you did not exercise discretion when turning in the representatives of the various species. If you see any particular birds being badly persecuted, or mauled, try and remove the sufferers—leave in the birds that are "top-dog." I advise you to take out the odd cock Blackbird and odd cock Thrush. I should have thought they would have fought viciously before this with the other males; perhaps they have been doing so. In my own opinion you have far too many birds in the place for breeding results, assuming the dimensions stated cover the end shelters. You could cut them down one-half, almost, with advantage; at any rate, eliminate the spinsters and bachelors.

Brevities.

A Goldfinch, etc. (F. J. Gosling).—I hope you will have luck with your muling couples. There are two possible explanations of the behaviour of the Goldfinch: (1) That he is in a cross (or out of season) moult; (2) that he is pestered by redmite. If the former, he will be shedding body feathers freely by the time you read this reply. He will have to be in full song before he is fit to pair up. If the underblaze goes back past the eye, or right up to the outer edge, it is a certain cock bird. It is too early for seeding shepherd's purse yet; will send a spray as soon as possible.

Greenfinch and Bramblefinch (G.O.).—A course of dandelion juice (taraxacum), from a chemist, would benefit the Bramblefinch which suffers from constant (more-or-less) constipation. Use a glass or pot vessel, and stir half a teaspoonful into each two tablespoonfuls of drinking water, Give until bowels move freely, and increase the dose a little if necessary. The foot of the Greenfinch you should steep for a few minutes twice daily in hot water, and afterwards gently massage with Elliman's or other strong embrocation. If the injury is of long standing, you may find it incurable.

A Man-killer (Old Maid).—Possibly your hen is a non-breeder (barren); or perhaps a suffragette! Anyway, she is certainly a rude person to "make faces" at the nice little cock bird you have provided for her. It may be, however, that she is far from being in breeding condition; often a hen will be "testy" then when pestered by a male bird, but behave very differently when "consumed by love's fires," as the poet says. Try her when she is seen carrying nesting material about, and commencing to deposit it in a nest-pan, The cock bird may then enjoy a very different kind of warm welcome to the one he now experiences.

Goldfinch Breeding (Saltash).—It is a very good sign of breeding condition when a Goldfinch's beak is quite clear, but the old, old story, which tells us that eggs will be no good unless the beak is clear, I have personally frequently proved to be false. The song and actions of a Goldie towards the hen are excellent signs, and your Finch, which is singing stoutly and feeding the hen Canary, will no doubt fill the eggs all right, despite the fact that his beak has not yet lost the dark streak from the tip. One of the best and free-est breeding Goldies I ever possessed seemed to hardly ever get his beak absolutely clear; he filled his eggs every time.

Wagtails (H.V.J.).—It is true Wagtails will often fight amongst themselves (though experiences vary in this matter, for my own birds behaved themselves), but I have never found them harm other species, and I have some now among my small Softbills. Seeing the spaciousness of your aviary, I am sure you might have a pair of both yellows and greys, and still stand a good chance of them breeding.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Zebrafinch with Canary.

"Shoemaking Novice."—I do not think this cross at all possible. Not that this would be Mr. Zebra's fault, for he is so anxious to be engaged in rearing a family that I am of opinion he would make up with the female of any species that would accept him; still, I am of opinion that your chances of successfully crossing it with the Canary are almost nil. You would be more likely to succeed by mating it with a Bengalese, Bicheno, Silverbill, Ruficauda, or Long-tailed Grassfinch. However, I never say a thing is impossible, but the cross you suggest is very improbable. Still, if you elect to try, I should get a female of some small variety of Canary. Such a cross, however, would only be eligible for the Foreign Hybrid class, and are not really valuable, save as a novelty.

Will it Talk?

W. C. Davidson.—I do not think your bird is a Rosella, but a Rose-breasted (or Roseate) Cockatoo. But as you do not describe its plumage, I cannot say. If it is a Cockatoo, this species, while possessing a reputation for being good talkers in their own country, boasts very few of the many specimens imported to this country, which can do much in this direction. They most certainly possess the capacity of speech, and they are fair mimics, droll, companionable, and accomplished acrobats. Your bird ought, at any rate, to speak a few words. Keep it in your midst, where it will hear plenty of conversation; also teach it by the constant repetition of odd words and short sentences. One only should be taught at a time, and a second not commenced till the first is thoroughly learned. If you care to describe its plumage, I shall have pleasure in naming it for you.

Foreign Bird Querists will find in our handbook, "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1, and "Budgerigars and Cockatiels," 6d. post free; a mine of information of use and interest.

Brevities.

What Bird? (J. Lyle).—It is the Avadavat, or Common Red Munia, of India. These are imported into this country in large numbers; you must watch dealers' advertisements. The price varies from 2/6 to 5/6 a pair. They do not breed freely in this country, though they have done so in several instances in aviaries. They are delightful little creatures, with their almost ever-changing plumage, and are very easy to cater for. Canary, white and spray millet, with green-food, grit and water, will suffice to keep them in health and condition. In the summer, and whenever it can be procured free from frost, supply ad lib, grass in flower (grass in the ear); also sprays from rose and fruit trees, and any non-poisonous foliage which is infested with greenfly or other plant lice.

PARK & LAKE AVICULTURE

Chinese Quails.

Dwarf.—You had better cut one wing of each of your Quails; if you clip the first ten quills only they will not be disfigured, and it will stop them from dashing violently about. Also give them a shelter to run behind, such as a board leaning against the wall. You are quite right in feeding on canary and millet, but you should also give a turf constantly, and a few mealworms, or some kind of a mixture for insectivorous birds, which should be dry. They will breed in captivity but must have long-growing grass in their run, so that they can hide their nest.

GENERAL.

Answered by the Editor.

A Suggestion (M. Fleming).—We are much obliged to you for the suggestion, which we will give our consideration.

Concerning Cages (E.B.F., Oak).—We cannot trace the number you refer to. Can you give us some idea as to its date, and the heading of the article containing the information? We will then make a further search.

Bird-life (E. Milne).—We very much appreciate your letter, and shall be glad to hear from you at any time.

Specials (Interested).—You will find information in the "Twitterings" page this week which, we believe, answers your question.

Club Notices (J. Kay, J. Irlams).—Your club notices arrived after we had gone to press last week; evidently you overlooked our announcement on page 344.

A Fancier (R.B.).—We should define a "fancier" as one who keeps or breeds birds for certain Fancy points. A person who merely keeps a singing bird as a pet, is not a "fancier." A fancier uses his own selective judgment as regards the "points" of the birds when buying or breeding.

Advertising (Turpin.).—Caged-off Linnets can certainly be advertised during the summer without "breaking the law." The possession of hand-reared specimens of protected species involves risk, of course, if the authorities choose to take action.

A Lancashire's Eye (Anxious).—If there were two small white specks on the pupils of the eyes (called "cataract" by fanciers), then the bird, we should think, would be blind, and so far as we know, impossible of cure. If it is merely matter collected about the eye, then bathing with a lotion composed of one grain of sulphate of zinc in one ounce of rose-water would relieve.

Shooting of Rare Birds (Anti-ornithological).—You surely do not think because we publish an account of the shooting of a rare bird in England, that we ourselves are in sympathy with such slaughter? On the contrary, we deprecate it just as strongly as you do yourself.

Sending Birds on Journeys (Constant Reader).—We could not entertain publishing your letter as sent. Your statements would only reflect on the many reputable fanciers and dealers. You are too pessimistic altogether. Let us hope that the recent lovely burst of spring weather will help you to a rosier outlook upon things in general and our hobby in particular. And why do you, may we ask, ignore the deposit system?

A Line Astray (G. Peters).—We are afraid you can have had but little experience of printers, whom the celebrated Dr. Johnson long years ago summed up as "the very devil." Evidently in making a correction, they misplaced the line. It is not the first time, by many, we have suffered at their hands; we wish we could hope it might prove the last. We very much regret, of course, it was your copy that got maltreated.

Gone Astray En Route (Anxious).—It is the custom of the bird trade for all birds to be sent at the purchaser's risk when the sale is an out-and-out one (that is, when there is no question of approval). This, we may say, is a custom with which we have never been able to agree, and we think it detrimental to the best interests of the bird trade, as in our view the contract cannot equitably be complete until the birds are delivered alive in accordance with the terms of the advertisement.

Non-payment of Prize Money (E. C. Collins).—It does not come within our province to "lecture" societies concerning their management, and apparently you overlook the fact that there is now a governing body with the power to suspend, or otherwise punish, societies which fail to pay out prize money. That is the tribunal to deal with this and similar matters, according to the merits of the case, i.e., as to whether there has been culpable, or even fraudulent, mismanagement.

DARNALL AND DISTRICT FUR & FEATHER (Including Cage Birds) ASSOCIATION.

SIR,—A meeting of fur and feather fanciers was held at the Ball Inn on April 5th, when the above-named society, with a strong committee, was formed to carry on the work. Mr. Greenfield kindly acted as chairman. The society will have a radius of 15 miles, and the annual subscription was fixed for 5s. The next meeting will take place at the Ball Inn, Darnall-road, on Monday, May 3rd, at 8.15, when all fanciers will receive a hearty welcome. All information may be had from me.

PEEWITS' EGGS.

SIR,—I notice a few lines in your last issue respecting the above, where the writer states that the collecting of the eggs is quite a business, and that some thousands are consumed annually. With the above facts any naturalist is forced to agree, as each year here in Berwickshire the hunt through field after field seeking these dainties (so-called) is yearly getting more keen, with the result that one of the most useful birds we have is getting scarcer. In my boyhood days I remember when the most glorious sight which could be seen in the autumn was thousands of these birds sweeping hither and thither, filling the air with the sound of their wings. When watching the graceful curves, and the vivid colouring, alternating from black and white, to dusky yellow, one had a sight which, once seen, could not be forgotten. The days I am referring to go back about twenty years. What a change has come over the locality. Sad to relate, instead of the thousands, I am sure there are scarcely so many hundreds, and the depletion is only to be accounted for by the inhuman lust for something "delicate" to please the palate of the classes who alone can afford to pay the exorbitant price dealers command for the eggs! The high price paid is a great inducement for any unemployed person to seek for them. That they make a good thing out of it one has only to glance into their basket to see. To any person who has a quick eye, or who has been country-reared amongst them, it is not a difficult matter to locate the nests of the Peewit. When I wish I can find out every nest in a field. Some of the keepers sent by the landed proprietors to gather the eggs are adepts, with the result that one scarcely notices any young birds until well into May. The first round of eggs (and sometimes the second) have been taken. I am fully convinced that unless something takes the place of these "dainties" the farmers in the district will suffer untold harm by the increase of the grubs, etc., which these birds alone feed on.

SENDING BIRDS ON JOURNEYS.

SIR,—In reply to John Canning, might I say that I think when advertisements are answered, and cash sent, the reply should be sent with promptness, and thus save all such unnecessary journeyings and trouble. A halfpenny postcard would avoid such. I have been repeatedly served in a like manner, and gone to the station many times daily. How would Mr. John Canning have proceeded, supposing he had had no intimation that the bird had arrived until he received the postcard on the Monday (although he sent a stamped addressed envelope, so that the vendor might let him know when the bird was sent off)? He went to the station, a three-mile journey, and did the same four times on the Friday, and four times on Saturday. All this he did, besides sending a wire and getting up from bed with a severe influenza cold. And yet he says, "but remember, I am dealing with a first-class man, and paying a good price." Save me, I say, from such, if that is the treatment to expect from a "first-class man." If the vendor in question is such, I should think he was gentleman enough to compensate Mr. C. for all his extra time and trouble.

CONSTANT READER.

THE EXHIBITING OF BIRDS.

SIR,—I trust the following remarks of mine will be accepted as being written with the very best intention, and with the one object of benefiting those interested in the breeding and showing of cage birds. A week or two back, you published a letter from a gentleman who had been unable to obtain his prize money from a certain society. In your last issue there is a letter from another unfortunate exhibitor who has also been unable to get the prize money due to him. These are not the only cases that have been brought to the notice of the readers of CAGE BIRDS. I contend that no society should hold an open show without taking into consideration all the responsibilities attaching thereto. If a society cannot do this, then let them wait until they can. Supposing an exhibitor "screws" himself a bit (we are not all wealthy) to enable him to send a few birds to a show, hasn't he, without being called unfair, the perfect right, in the event of his winning a prize, to demand that prize money, and adopt whatever methods he thinks best in order to get it? I wonder if he sent in his entry form without the entrance fee, promising to send that later, whether any society would accept his entry? The exhibitor must pay his entrance fee, but mustn't say anything if he doesn't get his prize money. I visited a show some two years back in the south of London. There were as many birds again as the hall would hold. I left at 9.45 p.m., and Yorkshires were still being judged! In my humble opinion, a society should be bound to adhere to its closing date. This is seldom done, and exhibitors knowing this, leave their entries until the last minute, and in consequence the various show officials have a rush for it, which is their own fault. A society should not take entrance fees for exhibits which they cannot comfortably accommodate and have judged fairly. They should be prepared to return exhibits in the event of there not being room to show them to advantage, else, it is not fair to the judge, and it is not fair to the exhibitor. I am not an exhibitor myself (I hope to become one), but I do feel most strongly on these and other questions which I have not time to deal with here.

WHAT IS A CLEAR?

SIR,—I cannot see my way clear to agree with the decision of the Norwich Plainhead Club, viz., "that in future ticked birds are eligible to compete in clear classes." It would have been more to their credit as a body of fanciers to have kept the clear classes intact and free from invasion by stating "in future all birds shown in clear classes must be absolutely clear." Of course, they are aware that ticked birds have been winning amongst the clears at several shows during the season; if the judge handled the winners it would stop that abuse, but I suppose the N.P.C., like W. Reid, do not believe handling is necessary. It shows clearly they have not much confidence in our judges. What is there to be alarmed at in a judge, if he is an expert which every judge ought to be, in handling a few winners? I can understand that a fraudulent exhibitor would be thoroughly against handling; in fact, quite indignant at the process, as by that means he might be detected. Not that I wish any of your readers to infer that the N.P.C. or Mr. Reid are in any way capable of fraud; far from it, but I am of opinion and maintain that it is necessary to handle some winning exhibits, or otherwise you are playing into the hands of the fraudulent exhibitors, viz., the painter, decorator, trimmer, etc., who will be more at ease in their work when they know that exhibits are not handled. I fully endorse the remark of Mr. R. J. Mackley, viz., "that ticked birds should not be eligible to compete in clear classes." First we have the evenly-marked classes, a feature of past shows, and now the ridiculous amalgamation of the "ticks" with the "clears." Where is the Fancy going? As years roll on, this amalgamation will be further improved upon by the introduction of only two classes of Norwich or Yorkshires at our exhibitions, viz., "any variety yellow," "any variety buff." Likewise we shall see pied or foul cinnamons competing in self cinnamon classes. The same remark applies to greens. Should this be the case, one thing is certain, and that is there will be a big bumping entry in each class, and very little prize money to pay away. If the above classification does not make shows pay, then it is no fault of those who issue the schedules.

J. W. KINGSMILL.

THE BORDER FANCY CANARY IN THE SOUTH.

SIR,—In the discussion on the above matter, Mr. William Eagle Bott has mentioned a lecture of mine, in which I am supposed to have said, in speaking of the Border type, "The smaller the better." I hardly think this is correct. I was comparing the style of the breeding of other varieties than the Border, and said it was recognised that size and colour followed the cock, and type and quality the hen, but that the difficulty with the Border was to keep it small enough. Hence, size in the cock was unimportant. I do not agree with Mr. Smith that there are two types of Borders—one for the South and another for the North. Very often the same judge officiates at both the Northern and Southern Shows, and he is not likely to give a different reading of the standard in different places. Bull-necked Borders are an abomination, and these bull-necks are nearly always accompanied by hog backs, which are also another eyesore. Again, thin necks are entirely out of place. What is wanted is a marble-like head fitted on to a neck not too long, nor too short, and not too thin, nor too thick; but beautifully shaped and finely moulded. In fact, the Border must be all mould from head to tail, and as little over 5 inches in length as possible. There must be no corners, no loose feathers, no coarseness, in either feather or style. The bird should be semi-erect, jaunty, and free in taking the perches, and be altogether what the ladies call "sweet." I agree with Mr. Patterson that the type of Border depicted with the standards of the two Border clubs cannot be improved upon. By the bye, I should just like to ask Mr. Patterson if he is of opinion that Scotland led the way in getting rid of the thick set type of Borders? I totally disagree with him that exhibitors should study the fads of judges. It is the judge's duty to judge to the standard, and it is the duty of breeders to breed as nearly as possible to the standard. Standards of any variety have not been made in a haphazard manner; they have been carefully thought out by practical fanciers and are not to be set aside by the fads of judges. If judges won't take the trouble to study the standards of the varieties they undertake to judge, then it is the judges, not the standards, that must be set aside. I hate this cant of studying the whims of judges. Let all true fanciers combine to breed and exhibit to the standard as nearly as possible. Judges would then have to judge to those standards or go; but so long as exhibitors pander to the fads of judges who won't take the trouble to study the standards, so long will true type be lost sight of. Any man who has the discriminating quality necessary in a judge, can read a standard intelligibly if he cares to do so. If breeders take this matter up with a pure love for the particular varieties they fancy, the questions of "What is a Border?" and "What is a Norwich?" would soon cease to exist.

SIR,—I see that "Wee McGregor" still chooses to hide, and is not sportsman enough to come out of his shell and disclose his identity. I think it is simply waste of time to answer such a poor "fancier" as this. He continues, I notice, to make statements that are very misleading and untrue, and my object in penning this, my last letter on the subject, is to contradict his remarks that Mr. W. M. Thomson and I are the same person. This is an absolute untruth, as I neither know Mr. Thomson nor from what part of the country he comes, and he is, therefore, a perfect stranger to me. Perhaps "Wee McGregor" is in the habit of doing that sort of thing, but when I enter a discussion I stand my ground openly. I do not hide behind a bush and make statements that are unjustifiable or uncalled for. As I have already said, I shall write no more unless "Wee McGregor" discloses his identity and drops personalities, for what have they to do with the type of Borders?

J. SMITH.

SIR,—I am exceedingly sorry that this discussion, which might have been most helpful to novices, should have degenerated into personalities. It is a great pity "Wee Macgregor" should have questioned the bona-fides of J. Smith, and suggested that he and Mr. Thomson are one and the same person. Taking the same line of argument, may I suggest that "Wee Macgregor" and Mr. J. Robson are one and the same person? May I further suggest that "Wee Macgregor" did not send his reply to the same source as Mr. Smith sent his letter, because he did not want his identity to be disclosed? For the purpose of clearing the air, may I ask "Wee Macgregor" a few questions?

1. Who spread the story in Carlisle that I was Mr. J. Smith and Mr. Thomson?
2. What qualifications entitle one to be called a "Specialist" judge?
3. Why do Mr. Bennet and other prominent breeders of Borders not show under Mr. Robson?
4. Did "Wee Macgregor" see the Borders at the last Palace Show?

ROBERT ELLWOOD.

IS SHE A SUFFRAGETTE?

SIR,—I would feel pleased if you or any reader would tell me through your paper how I may get this marriage arranged? I have had a good Norwich hen for two years, since she was bred. Until two months ago she had never seen another bird. Thinking she would like to mate, I tried a good cock Linnet, but she soon killed him. I tried again last week, with another Linnet, but no, it's all off. Well, during this week I viewed some good Canaries, and selected a cock which I watched singing for half-an-hour. I brought him home, and put the cages side by side; but she goes making faces at him, and he hasn't sung a note, only twitter.

OLD MAID.

INFORMATION WANTED ON LINNET SINGING.

SIR,—As the Linnet is a favourite of mine, I should like some of the secretaries of the singing societies to write to CAGE BIRDS and let us know a few of the ins and outs of Linnet singing. I should like to know a little about York singing: is it time singing; how long do they hang the birds in the window; what time do they do; how do they count the singing (if in breaks or not); how many seconds do they have to sing before it is counted? I am sure there are other Linnet fanciers besides myself who would value the information. I should also like the secretary of the Leigh Society to let us into their way of time singing. I see that Lady Green is the champion there, but will want to do better singing than 98 seconds and 149 seconds out of 5 minutes. Last week's singing was a bit better, 240 straight up, 4 minutes out of 5. That is enough to frighten a certain well-known fancier whom I once heard say he would give 30s. for a bird that could do 71 seconds out of 2 minutes. Will the secretary of the Leigh Society let us know how they count their birds, and how many seconds they have to sing before they are counted singing? At Barnsley they count all by 5; if a bird sings 4 seconds he gets nothing, if he sings 9 seconds he counts 5 and 4 over.

FRENCH CHALK AND BOWEL TROUBLES.

SIR,—In reply to "Constant Reader and Noviee" respecting the use of French chalk for bowel troubles, I may say that I have found it always answer my purpose for any kind of birds. When giving it to Hardbills I mix it in the egg food or any other soft food I may be in the habit of giving them.

J. BARBER.

SIR,—With regard to the above, it is quite a serious matter to give French chalk (creta gallica) to birds, or even human individuals, as although not scheduled as a poison, it is more frequently than not found to be impure; as in the case of the lady in Huddersfield to whom her husband, from a lack of knowledge, administered such as an antacid containing arsenic, from the effects of which she died almost momentarily. What is really meant—and that is quite safe—is prepared chalk, or, medically speaking, precipitated chalk. Here is another proof that a little knowledge is a dangerous thing, and may lead to the loss of valuable lives.

J. HAMILTON, L.S.E.P.

Hopwood-lane Dispensary, Halifax.

---

SIR,—I noticed in last week's CAGE BIRDS that a correspondent makes enquiries concerning "French chalk" and bowel troubles in birds. "French chalk" (so-called) should never be given to any bird, but powdered chalk, which is quite another thing, is a very valuable and safe medicine to use for any species in cases of diarrhœa, given in minute doses, say a pinch in egg food, or else well mixed in the drinking water, for a few days. Powdered chalk may be procured at any chemist's at a small cost. But I have usually found that maw seed will cure any ordinary bowel troubles in British birds or Canaries.

WHOSE IDEAS WERE THEY?

A Challenge and a Justification.

SIR,—A lecture was given by a member of the Leyton and District Society, at headquarters, on April 5th, when all fanciers were cordially invited. It was to have been on "Cage-making," but turned out to be on a series of ideas used by the lecturer in his birdroom, he claiming them to be his own bona-fide ideas, two of which—a seed-hopper and a perch—he has recently provisionally protected. It was very interesting throughout. When the lecture was over, and it was open for questions to be asked, I, as a member, referred to the two ideas that had been protected, knowing them both to have been on the market two and more years respectively, rendering the protection null and void. This led to a discussion, the lecturer taking an emphatic oath that they were worked out of his own brain. This I tried to explain was not so, and as it was getting rather warm, a member made a proposition that it should be brought to a close, which was done, leaving the lecturer apparently triumphant in his own estimation, but not to all present. I, as a protest against his action and for my own protection, ask him respectfully to withhold from using my name in the way he is doing very freely at the present time. Mr. Fuller and I hereby challenge him to any special committee meeting that the Leyton C.B.A. may think fit to fix, and we will have the truth out, man to man, with regard to this seed-hopper and perch, so that we are able to give the facts. I do not intend to enter into any controversy with him through our Fancy paper, so the sooner these points are cleared up personally the better. I fear no man on the statement I made before a full meeting.

A. MALLETT (West Ham).
R. FULLER (Stratford).

CINNAMON BORDER FANCIES AND THEIR COLOUR.

SIR,—The discussion on the above is getting somewhat away from the subject, which I take to be: Is the Cinnamon Border as good a colour to-day as in former years? If my supposition is correct, the answer must be in the negative, and the reason is not far to seek. Most of the Cinnamons to-day are hens—sports from the Green, and certainly showing the Green tinge, which is fatal to Cinnamon colour. Some nine years ago I had some lovely coloured Cinnamon Borders, a shade larger than I like to see them now; they were pure-bred Cinnamons and had been bred down from Norwich Cinnamons. I stood 4th with one in mixed class at the old Liverpool Society's Open Show, Mr. C. A. House, I think, being the judge. At this time I had built up a very nice team of both Border and Yorkshire Cinnamons, but one night a rat cleared the lot out and so saved me a lot of trouble and caused me many a tear. This year I have been fortunate enough to get a cock Cinnamon, very near the correct type, and as I have about half-a-dozen hens that in my opinion are gems for type, I hope to have something decent for the next show season. I hope soon to see the Cinnamon Border with classes for itself. It is very much in the making at present and consequently does not stand much chance against the Green with which it has to compete. Of course, I know classes have been given for Cinnamons in the South, but this is the solitary exception as far as I know. Mr. Clinch, in one of his letters, made the statement that "The Cinnamon was recessive to the Green." I should like Mr. Clinch to give us his data for this assertion. So far as I understand the subject, the Cinnamon bred by itself is absolutely certain to breed nothing but Cinnamon. How, then, can it be recessive of anything? By recessive, I take it Mr. Clinch means that it is simply a side issue, or sport, from the Green. I have to thank Mr. Clinch for the support he has given to my motion re taking the Green Border into the Green Canary Association. I should also like to point out to the members of the two Border clubs how needless is their anxiety that this motion, if carried, would interfere with the work of the Border clubs. If the G.C.A. take this matter up, it will not be long before the Green Border is as popular and will command as ready a classification as any other variety of the Border. This ought to be a big consideration with breeders, as new fanciers will require mating up with stock, which will be beneficial to the present Fancy.

SIR,—I was pleased to see another letter on the above subject by Mr. Dixon. Really, I was rather amused at some of his remarks. He says I seem to be right and everybody else wrong, and that my letter was full of doubt. I must thank Mr. Dixon for this, but I would remind him that I am quite prepared to give in should I be proved to be in the wrong. Mr. Dixon says that everyone is entitled to his own opinion. Yes, and I don't deny him his right to an opinion, but his is not consistent with the facts. I must remind him that it is the colour of the Cinnamon Border that is the point in dispute. I only raised the question as to the Cinnamon cocks to show that the Cinnamon Border, as a separate variety, was not of old standing, but were sports from the Green and were mostly hens, and that being bred from Greens they could not be of the rich chocolate tone aimed at nowadays. Mr. Dixon says he knew of another self Cinnamon cock that won at Selkirk in 1902, and that his bird and this one were as near to the club's standard type as was possible. If they were not, he says, how did they happen to be 1st and 3rd? Let me remind Mr. Dixon that because a bird gets a 1st it doesn't prove it to be a good one. No, we have at the present time birds winning that are far back from the club's standard. I think Mr. Dixon, when at the Scottish National Show, would not be blind to the fact that different judges had different opinions, because if all the 1st prize birds were placed side by side one would be able to see at a glance that there is a great variety of types. Surely, I don't need to point out, as Mr. Dixon is able to see for himself. I never put any stress on a bird's getting 1st, unless I am at the particular show and able to see the birds it has beaten, as perhaps if you looked at the others behind at a given show you would easily find three or four to beat the 1st. Of course, many people have no eyes for the birds out of the tickets (unless they happen to belong to themselves); they look over the birds in the tickets and, of course, they are bound to be the best, because they won. Mr. Dixon says he wasn't at any of the other shows I mentioned. Well, I can tell him that he hasn't seen half of the Cinnamon Borders shown last season. However, seeing he was at the Scottish National Show and still says that his bird 3rd at Hawick was of better colour (in his opinion) than those shown at the Scottish National Show. I must say that that bird must have been something exceptional for colour, as two of the disputed birds were at the Scottish National Show. I must remind Mr. Dixon that I did not say the bird that I mentioned in my last letter was disqualified. I said that it was left cardless, the judge being of opinion that it was colour-fed. I will not disclose the name of the show, and the catalogue number, etc., as I fail to see how that would help us in the discussion. But I will say that if Mr. Dixon's bird were of better colour than those shown at the Scottish National (were, in fact, the colour "your reporter" advocated in his criticisms of the Crystal Palace Cinnamon class), and were shown nowadays, 99 out of 100 judges would put it down as being colour-fed.

A QUESTION FOR GOLDFINCH FANCIERS.

SIR,—Allow me through your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, to ask if any reader could tell me what is the best thing to give to a Goldfinch when it is constipated, as I have lost some very nice birds through this cause. W. M.

A NOTED LINNET.

SIR,—The "bounce" in Mr. F. A. Watt's letter last week almost takes one's breath away, because it is within the memory of present-day novices that Mr. Watt made his debut on the exhibition bench. I know neither of the combatants personally, but there is a disease called "swelled head," and one of them has got it badly. As an older man and fancier than Mr. Watt, I can make some allowance, because one cannot find an old head on young shoulders, but when a man a very few years in the Fancy takes an important fixture to judge he, in my opinion, has to put up with the consequent criticism. "Oh wad some power the giftie gie us, to see oursels as ithers see us."

PROPOSED NEW SOCIETY FOR SOUTHALL (Middlesex).

SIR,—It has been suggested by several fanciers in the locality that a Cage Bird Society be formed for Southall and district. There are many people who keep cage birds of some variety or the other in the neighbourhood, and it is perhaps needless to say that the formation of such a society would satisfy a long-felt want and be very beneficial to cage bird men as against societies already in existence which do not cater for cage birds solely. In view of the facts stated, I see no reason why a good company of fanciers should not be drawn together, and the society formed. With a view to bringing about the desired result, I shall be pleased if fanciers and intending fanciers interested would be kind enough to forward their names and addresses to me.

IS IT NECESSARY TO COLOUR-FEED BRITISH BIRDS?

SIR,—Being deeply interested in the great question of colouring British birds by the artificial method of colour food, it is natural that I should have read with more or less interest the two lectures of recent dates, touching upon that question, given by gentlemen who hold somewhat influential positions in the Fancy, and whose sermons may be taken to heart very much by the ever-growing congregation of "raw recruits." Although it is my contention that every person has the right and privilege of enjoying his own opinion, there is still the danger of many of that "congregation" suffering from undue influence and so being the means of affording, firstly, unnecessary inconvenience, if not pain, to their pets, and, secondly, agents to unfair competition with fellow exhibitors. Taking, as in order, the lecture given before the City and Suburban Society, where poor "Old Malcontent" got such a drubbing, I would ask Mr. Prior if he himself was always well pleased at the result of some of his months of trouble and patience to find "What he thought" his champion, beaten into oblivion by "What he thought" a waster, or has he always been what his lecture would have us all believe, a hardened and staid exhibitor? No, Sir, I'm afraid not, for exhibitors, like fanciers, are not full-blossomed in a day or a year. Now, Mr. Prior, you may assume innocence in regard to this faking system, but, with your wide experience (much wider perhaps than my own) you surely have come across some of those little "wheezes," such as glycerine, sweet oil, koko oil, etc., etc., not to mention some of the pigments some stoop to use to gain what I term filthy aspirations. Going back to what the lecture was billed as, "Is it necessary to colour-feed British birds?" Mr. Prior says "Yes," and I say "No," although I value myself as a very small unit against the experience and influence of Mr. Prior. But having been bred and born in a bird's nest, as it were, and having caught and hand-reared some hundreds of British birds, both Hard and Soft-bills, I am taking the liberty of assuming that I know something of what is required of a "Pure-bred Britisher." According to the schedules which we receive from Secretaries, it stipulates that awards are to be made for beauty and purity of breed, yet we are told by another lecturer that it is surprising the strength of the "dye" contained in tasteless pepper, so what amount must be contained in hot pepper? And does not this admission prove without a doubt that to colour-feed at all is dyeing a bird, adding an artificial pigment to the natural pigments, and producing that which was never ordained to be? Again, this same gentleman admits killing and opening a bird and finding inflammation, and intestines ulcerated, through the excessive use of artificial colouring. So what is the difference between faking inside and outside? Then are there more British birds colour-fed than non-fed and improved "in colour and appearance"? Has Mr. Ramsden ever inspected a bird-catcher's store-cage about October or November, with a good mixed lot in it? What could be more beautiful than some of its inmates? Put a full-coloured Goldie, just caught, against that Palace winner this last show, and it would be nowhere in it for beauty. Also it would be the same with some Chaffinches. I myself once caught a Chaffinch which I have never seen equalled on the show bench. No, gentlemen, I am not yet convinced that colour-feeding is even fair, or legitimate, or beneficial to any of us. But I will agree with even the clerk in the excise office that if it is his means or part means of his income, let us all be taxed, for no taxes, no clerks, no colour-feed, no vendors. Seeing that this is a question that is ever cropping up, I would respectfully submit to our Editor that a poll be taken to really sound the feeling of the majority of British bird fanciers and exhibitors. I trust that both Mr. Prior and Mr. Ramsden will accept this slight criticism in the same spirit as they expected theirs to be received, and I trust to remain always a reader of CAGE BIRDS but never a colour-feeder.

H. J. HAWES.

THE INTERESTING EXPERIENCES OF A CANARY BREEDER.

SIR,—Having had the pleasure of inspecting the aviary of Mr. Jos. Lepla, the well-known Newmarket Canary breeder, and gathering from him in course of conversation some particulars of his connection with the Fancy, I thought the same might be of interest to your readers. Mr. Lepla is a native of the "metropolis of the turf," and he told me that he first began to take an interest in Canaries about 22 years ago. He started his hobby in a fairly large way for a beginner, his stock consisting of six pairs or Norwich Plainheads. Unlike some new beginners, Mr. Lepla "struck oil" from the commencement, for he did remarkably well in his early attempts. This naturally increased his interest in the hobby, for "nothing succeeds like success," and Mr. Lepla began to be more ambitious. Soon afterwards he moved into larger premises, and as Mrs. Lepla had a hobby too, viz., the growing of ferns, they decided to build a glass house to accommodate both ferns and birds. He soon realised that the experience given by other breeders in CAGE BIRDS, was to be his experience, too, and that what was good for ferns was not good for birds. Having alterations made in his business premises, Mr. Lepla then had a special place erected for his Canaries. The room is a very lofty one, well built of brick, with plaster walls and tiled roof. Here he has reared some thousands of birds during the past nineteen years, and fine birds the majority of them have been. This house is entirely given up to the birds. He told me that he has no heating apparatus, and only in the very coldest weather does he "warm up" at all. Having been so successful with his Norwich Plainheads, his first love, he went in for Cinnamons, also Norwich Crests and Lizards. The latter he dropped, not being very successful in getting the stamp of high-class birds that he always aims at. His stock at the present time consists principally of the Norwich Plainheads, Crests, and Cinnamons, and the birds are fine and healthy looking. To show how the hobby has grown upon Mr. Lepla, I have only to mention that this season he has now 53 pairs up for breeding. Not a bad lot for a hobby; but he is an enthusiast, and that accounts for much. He is hopeful of having a good time, and if care and attention count, he will have it. Mr. Lepla has not been a very extensive advertiser, but he told me that, thanks to CAGE BIRDS, when he has advertised, he has found plenty of customers. Last year he sent a number of birds to the West Indies—a long journey; but he had the pleasure of knowing that they arrived safely. Mr. Lepla, in the course of our conversation, spoke in the highest terms of CAGE BIRDS, the contents of which, he finds, invaluable; while for buying and selling, it is, he says, a very sound medium indeed. He advocates and supports its claims to all interested in bird life.

A NEW CAGE BIRD SOCIETY FOR LINCOLN AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—I was very pleased to see in your last week's issue that the cage bird fanciers of the city of Lincoln (my native town) had held a meeting and formed a Cage Bird Society, and had elected officers, etc. Being a practical breeder and exhibitor myself, I can fully endorse the chairman's (Mr. C. Pickering's) remark that it is a step in the right direction. The breeding and exhibiting of cage birds is a most interesting and instructive hobby, I myself having derived a great amount of pleasure from it for a considerable number of years. Although the membership at present is limited to a six-mile radius, I wish the society and its officers every success, hoping that the time is not far distant when the city of Lincoln will be able to have its annual open cage bird show, second to none.

AN L. AND P.O.S. MEMBER.

SOME HINTS BY A LOVER OF YORKSHIRES.

See Our Frontispiece This Week.

SIR,—I am very pleased to know that you are publishing a sketch of my clear yellow Yorkshire Canary in your very interesting and valuable journal this week. This bird was hatched in 1907 and won several prizes early in that show season, including 1st at Walthamstow against old birds. He finished the season by getting 3rd in the champion unflighted class at the Crystal Palace, there being 39 in the class, and S.Y.C.C. diploma for best Yorkshire by a member of that club. Thinking it wiser, I did not pair him up last season, but held him over for the show season that has just terminated. I got him nicely through the moult and commenced sending him out. At our own show (Weybridge) he captured the cup for best Canary in the show exhibited by a member of the society, and you can guess I had great hopes that he would require a lot of beating during the season. But, unfortunately, he commenced to go soft and fell into another moult early in December. Consequently I had the colour-feeding process to go through again, and to my disappointment he came out patchy in colour, which completely spoilt the chance of showing him to advantage afterwards. He is, however, very fit and well now, and I have him paired up with a winning ticked buff hen of good length and quality, and am awaiting with interest to see whether they will produce something that is equal to themselves. With regard to management. About the end of January I put all my stock hens into a large flight so that they get plenty of exercise and thus keep in good condition until the time arrives for pairing, which I always defer doing until the first week in April. Through February and March I give a small quantity of egg food about twice a week, a little hemp, German rape, niger, and maw seeds. The staple food, of course, is good bold Spanish canary. I also give a regular supply of cuttlefish bone between the wires of the cages, and clean shell grit. If this is done there is not much fear of having egg-bound hens when the time arrives for pairing up. I always have a spring cleaning of breeding cages, etc., during the month of March in order that everything may be ready and absolutely clean for pairing up the first week in April if the weather is then favourable. I plunge each cage into a bath containing tepid water, to which has been added a quantity of fir tree oil. No insect will live in this solution. After the cage is dry I colour the outside black and the inside pale green with Hall's distemper. I think this puts a nice finish to the cage, and it has advantages over painting the inside, viz., when the birds have bathed the water is scattered about the cage, and if the inside is painted or enamelled it hangs in beads for a considerable time, whereas with the distemper above referred to it is absorbed immediately and the cage is quite dry again in a very few minutes. I use single breeding cages with the nest pan hung in the centre, with no clumsy divisions, platforms or trays inside, which harbour that dreaded insect, the red mite. The wire fronts are all movable and punched bar, which can easily be taken out and replaced without very much trouble. Again thanking you for placing the sketch of my yellow on the front of your paper, and also Mr. Norman, your gifted artist,

H. E. PARROTT.

CAN IT BE CURED?

SIR,—I have a yellow Lancashire coppy cock showing a white speck on either eye, and I should be pleased if any reader could tell me if there is any means of removing same, as it is a bird that cost a good sum of money to get hold of, and I have never bred off it yet. They are about the size of small pin-head, and I think they may be "cataracts," which in the case of people are removed, but I do not know if they can be removed from birds. The bird is healthy and singing well.

ANXIOUS.

THE CONSTRUCTION OF AN OUT-DOOR BIRDROOM.

SIR,—I have been much interested in the outside birdroom described by Mr. Lawton, and intend to make one myself. I gave up the hobby of bird keeping some years since through want of room. Will Mr. Lawton therefore kindly help me in regard to the following questions which are not quite clear to me? In making the end sections are matchboards nailed on to the 2in. side of sparring? And what is the bottom of room to rest upon after the inside is covered with matchboards, as there are then only flat walls left?

J. G. LEIGH.

SIR,—The difficulty that Mr. Lawton sees as regards the packing of the space between the ply boards and the matchboards, can very easily be overcome by the following means. Lay the first piece of ply board horizontally from one upright to the other. This will cover up to 3ft., or whatever width you like to use. Securely nail it, and then fill up the space with sawdust, gently pressing it down until you get it pretty well solid. Then put up your next piece of board and continue the same up to about 6in. or 7in. from the top, for it will not matter very much, I think, if such a small space as that is left. Then cut a piece of board to fit in that space and you have done one end or side, whichever you started on, and I think far quicker than if you did it with the matchboards. When all the inside has been lined you can either finish it with a coat or two of paint, or else a good washable distemper, and I think you will be highly gratified by the results, for then you will have not only a draught-proof place, but one that is also sound proof.

Why? Because all my Parrots are young, strong, and reliable. My lifetime has been spent among Grey Parrots, both at home and abroad. I guarantee every customer every satisfaction. Grey Parrots are my special fancy. I have trained them, know their wants, and can give every purchaser a bird that will please him in every way. I can supply grey talkers, not thinkers, that will say almost anything, at reasonable prices. Before you purchase a grey or green Parrot, send for my Booklet, entitled "Talking Parrots." All my birds are sent on four weeks' trial, at my risk. Send postcard for catalogue.—Mrs. Forster, Princes Park Aviaries, Violet Street, Liverpool.

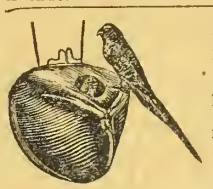
Full list on application. Telephone 6341 Avenue.



Now please remember that during the last 18 years I have bred thousands of Budgerigars, and I publicly wager £50 that I have imported, manufactured, sold, and shipped more wired cokernut husk nests for Budgerigar breeding than any other man living; so have any bragging copyists, or so-called shippers sufficient British pluck to accept? If so, step forward; if not, don't brag, but stand down. For 18 years my husks have been uncqualled. Don't be gulled by inexperienced shopkeepers; listen to what experts say:—"Cage Birds" says they are "far superior to the old husks." "Feathered World" says: "Undoubtedly, the new husks are very superior to the old." Again, "Exchange and Mart" says: "Those prepared by Mr. Harper are very superior to the old style, which often fall to pieces at the most critical time, with disastrous results for the nestlings. You had better order the improved form; even if it is a little dearer than the old-fashioned sort, it is cheaper in the long run." "Fur and Feather" tells its correspondents: "They have distinct advantages over the old sort." "Poultry" has said: "For Budgerigars we advise the use of the improved style of husks." Surely these are convincing testimonials.

Don't forget, you have the benefit of 18 years' practical breeding experience. I don't keep a shop; one quality only, the best. My "Improved Secure" husks are 4/6 dozen, smaller quantities 5d. each. Few Cockateel nest boxes 1/6 each. Illustrated pamphlet, entitled "Budgerigar Breeding," free on application.

ALWAYS USE OUR DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.
